KIT'S COLUMN

The Fall Fashions, presaging Winter's vagaries, are here. Extravagance reaches its climax in the matter of furs. Time was, and not so long ago, that you cannot remember, when the sealskin coat—a shapeless garment, I grant you, but for that very all the more useful in keeping out the cold—was, with muff and cap to match all that a woman craved in the matter of furs. These, carefully cared for during the moth-months, were worn year after year, unchanged in cut or style. It was considered almost a crime to put scissors into such a valuable "sacque." A man didn't have to buy furs for his wife every Christmas as he is now expected to do. But the day of the scissors arrived, and now it clips gaily through valuable skins, snipping off a corner or rounding the circle. It ploughs through chinchilla and sable as though these exquisite furs were mere Alaska seal, or rabbit pretending to be something that would have gobbled him up, fur and all, if it had caught him. Furs are slashed and draped and trimmed, and this year more havoc than before is wrought with them. The motor fur coat is banished to make room for the smart fur shoulder wrap, and muffs promise to be larger than ever. All this with the cost of living at top notch and salaries changeless as the fixed stars! I think women have gone mad over dress. Naturally, the shops cater to our extravagant notions and thrive accordingly. And the men are silent. Since, then, they utter no protest, are we to assume that they are content to see most of their earnings go on the backs of their womankind?

For, though the wives and daughters of clerks and bookkeepers and mechanics, and men of other office who work on a salary, cannot purchase the furs which take the fancy of the women of wealth, they buy expensive imitations—which, because they soon grow shabby and mangy are in the end the more costly. The furriers, the milliners, the dressmakers and the shops get most of the salary, as they get most of the narrow wage of the working woman. There is not enough left for the home and the family, and debt is the natural result. Everyone seems to be living that Dickens sixpence above his income. You remember Micawber's reasoning—"Annual income twenty pounds, annual expenditure nineteen six, result happiness. Annual income twenty pounds, annual expenditure twenty pounds ought and six, result misery." Alas! that sixpence!

In figure, too, woman, "lovely creature!" is to remain an oblong, shapeless thing. We shall even be more pencil-like, more hipless than before. The present fashions verge on the indecent, and if the foolish little girls I see wagging along the streets in their short and exceedingly tight gowns would only get it into their heads that they look positively indecent. I am sure they would modify their ideas of fashion by admitting a few inches more cloth into their skirts. It cannot be possible, as an elderly man remarked a few days ago that "these girls accentuate that sort of thing" (meaning immodest revelation of figure.) I do not believe that our Canadian women are so devoid of modesty as all that. If, however, any girl with a beautiful figure imagines that she is enhancing her attractiveness by revealing its outlines as far as was, "How Vermonters are best Got she can, she would, could she hear the remarks made by men—which one overhears on every boat and car—modify her style of street dress and be very careful to appear that which is not so common among us as it might be—a lady. One can be what is called "in the style" without rushing it to such an extreme that it becomes offensive and unmistakably vulgar.

The wise man is he who takes a trunk with him for his summer outings. This we learned from hearing one who takes no week-ends in town, but does a good deal of visiting. "There's economy in it," he says. "I worked this out to my own satisfaction as I' mgoing to tell you. At first I didn't take my trunk because I didn't want to shock my hostess by arriving with baggage enough for a month. So I used to take a kit bag and made up the cost of it this way. Take my trip to a friend's country house a month ago. The bag was too big for me to carry, so I gave the bellhop ten cents for putting it on the cab. The cabby insisted on getting down at the station to take it out, while I was looking for the porter that's never on his job. That meant a quarter to him. Then the porter got ten cents to put it on the train. When we got to the ferry a boy got another dime to carry it aboard. When I got off the man on the other side who put it into the parlour car got ten cents more for that service. Then when I got off the last train a station man picked up the bag and carried it over to the runabout and put it in the back seat and he got a quarter because it was all the change I had.

That made an aggregate of 85 cents I had paid for transporting one kit bag for a little more than an hour's ride. No more of that for me. For twenty-five cents I have my trunk taken to any station, and there I check it without further expense. I give the check to the chauffeur or whoever they send to meet me, and that ends it till it's time to go home."

"But what about the chauffeur?"

"Oh, well, I have to tip him when leaving, and he gets no more for looking after my trunk than he would anyway. Yes, sir—I tell you it's cheaper to travel with a trunk—

"But your hostess—" The man was busy lighting a cigar. Only his eyes answered, and the hostess might not have been overpleased if she could have seen the careless humour of his glance.

A talking clock is the latest. What it will say is not yet known, but possibly it will cry the hours. Just imagine waking in the heart of the night and hearing a Ghostly Voice calling "Two o'clock" very appropriately after the manner of the old-time Watch. It is sure to be a hollow voice and one well punctuated by ticks. As yet it is in the air, and we can only hope that it is hot air. Why not—while the inventor is about it—make a clock which will fire off a funny story instead of doing the Watchman's act? Can you realize the bliss of living with a clock which had twelve jokes it told over twice every day? Imagine the mother-in-law joke floating up the stairs to you at three o'clock in the morning. Think of the same old "I was walking down the street the other day, and—" and then your boot crashing into the clock's face while your wife dismally shrieked, "Burglars!" Then there would be the regret for the tick of a vanished hand, and the sound of a voice that is still.

If you have not read The Other Wise Man, do not hesitate about getting the little book. It is a very old story told in a new and quaint way. If it but leads you for an hour into far and peaceful places, it will have fulfilled its object. It may also wake you to more deeds of kindness and unselfishness, and so do a good turn. In any case you will travel to distant countries by way of level plains and rich gardens, through many a desolate pass and upon the wind-swept hills of God, and on with the Other Wise Man and so join in the quest of Abraham. He is a good comrade to travel with and will teach you many things and tell you tales that you have heard before but perhaps have forgotten. To this creator, Henry Van Dyke—a most lovable author—he came, a vision in the night. Like many wonderful and beautiful things, he came on the wings of the strength-bringers, sickness and sorrow. As to the end of his quest some may count it that he failed, but after all disappointment is the salt of life—a salutary bitter which strengthens the mind for fresh exertion and gives a value to the prize. And even if there is to be no prize it is still well; so there be energy and the will to aspire even to the end; for then there is no despair in the life, and no satiety—which is worse.

The ideal manners of the perfect tailor was the title of a recent article in a trade journal. It is pointed out that the ninth part of a man should "avoid subservience" and yet as far as possible "express agreement with the customer's prejudices." The task is not always easy and we would advise the tailor when in difficulties to follow the method of Lewis Carroll—who when he was asked to express admiration for a particularly ugly infant contemplated it gravely for a few minutes and then said: "Well, that IS a baby!" Of course, had the author of Alice and her Wonderland lived over here he might have put it, "Well, that is SOME baby!"

THE FAMILY HEARTH

Let young girls be thoroughly impressed with the fact that on themselves, in a large degree, depends the success of the men they marry. Let them know how to cook, giving them a thorough course in the kitchen. Let them begin where their mothers left off, and we shall have a generation of girls strong, hopeful, ambitious, and self-reliant, that will elevate the men, and make a hardier and more aggressive people, and thousands of firesides happier and better.

* * *

The first question a man asks when he sees a girl flirting is whether she is respectable or not; it raises a doubt at once. This being the case no modest girl can afford to indulge in the pastime. When the down is brushed from a peach its beauty is so marred that it can never be restored, and when a young girl throws lightly aside that sweet and modest reserve so becoming to a maiden, and which so elevates her and enables her to command the respect of all, she loses the great charm and becomes rather cheap and common, to use no rash terms.

* * *

There must be no drones in the home if it is to be a perfectly happy place and there must be no inordinate selfishness. An idle person and a selfish person will disturb the peace of the whole family. While there must be loyalty and unity, there must also be great freedom for the expression of personal tastes and respect for individual activity.

* * *

Few people realize how much the little attentions of every day life mean to their associates in the home, the church, the business place. It is generally a lack of consideration which makes one forget the tiny pleasantries; but lack of consideration is really one form of selfishness, and selfishness is not considered a desirable quality. Remember that the little things of life, either good or bad, count for more with those we love than we ever know, and we should be watchful of our actions and our words

* *

Many a girl without the slightest talent for music is running a piano who should be making bonnets or bread; and many a boy is studying for a learned profession whose proper sphere is the machine shop of the mill; many a man is splitting up churches who ought to be doing good service in some institution of learning, teaching or working on a farm, and many a woman is trying in vain to be a leade of society when she should be a model housewife in her own home.

* * *

Some men and women have easy times, but that does not mean happy times. The easy men and women do not look as might be expected. They struggle under the load of ease. When they laugh they only make believe laugh. Having such an easy time they become lazy. Their bones become stiff; their heads become clogged up and their hearts become hard. If the inhabitants of "Easy Street" had to scratch for a living, the result would be that they would be less troubled with dyspepsia.

* * *

We like to sing the praises of the sisterhood who remain unmarried that they might administer to aged parents. The brutal world calls these self-sacrificing ones peculiar or angular, but if you had had as many annoyances as they had had, Xantippo would have been an angel compared with you. It is easier to take care of five rollicking, romping children, than of one childish old man. Among the best women are those who allowed the bloom of life to pass away while they were crying for their parents. While other maidens were sound asleep they were soaking the old man's feet or tucking up the covers around the invalid mother. While other maidens were in the cotillion, they were dancing attendance upon rheumatism, and spreading plasters for the lame back of the septuagenarian, and heating catnip tea for insomnia.

TRAIN THE GIRLS

When a girl is ten years old she should be given household duties to perform, according to her size and strength, for which a sum of money should be paid her weekly. She needs a little pocket money and the knowledge how to spend it judiciously which can so well be given by a mother to her little girl. She should be required to furnish a part of her wardrobe with this money. For instance, if she gets ten cents a week she should purchase all her stockings or all her gloves, as her mother may decide; and doing this under the mother's supervision, she will soon learn to trade with judgment and economy. Of course, the mother will see to it that the sum is sufficient to do this and yet leave a trifle for the child to spend as she pleases. This will supply a healthy stimulus; it will give her a proper ambition and pride in her labour and the ability to use money properly. As she grows older these household duties should be increased, with the proportionate increase of money paid for the performance of them. We know of a lady who divided the wages of a servant among her three daughters. There is a systematic arrangement of their labour, which is done with a thoroughness and alacrity rarely found, either, with a hired girl or daughter who feels that she has to do it with nothing to encourage or stimulate her in the work.

RECIPES FOR HOUSEWIVES

BEEF ROLL

Roll out biscuit dough thin, cover with hamburger steak mixed with salt, pepper and chopped onion; roll like a jelly cake and bake an hour and a half. Serve with brown gravy.

BROWN GRAVY

Melt a tablespoonful of butter, add two tablespoons of flour, keep stirring till a golden brown, add a cup of hot water poured in slowly; add salt and pepper and let cook till smooth. This gravy can be used for most any kind of meat. Very nice for steak and chops.

BUTTERED POTATOES

Slice cold boiled potatoes lengthwise, put into a saucepan a good lump of butter and salt, add the potatoes as the butter melts and shake over the fire until they are very hot and covered with a sort of glaze, but not browned.

MACARONI PIE

Boil one pound of macaroni in salted water about twenty minutes, drain it, and put a layer of macaroni FAMILY HEARTH—GAL TWO in a deep buttered pan; then add a layer of minced cold meat, seasoning chopped onion, and some tomato juice mixed with some gravy. Add the remaining macaroni, pour over this a cup of milk, some grated cheese and breadcrumbs. Bake half an hour and serve hot.

SAUCE TARTARE

Make a good drawn butter as directed, but substitute boiling water for the hot milk. This done and the mixture creamed, beat in a teaspoonful of French mustard, half teaspoonful of strained onion juice, a dash of cayenne, a little salt, a heaping teaspoonful of minced cucumber or gherkin pickle, and, at the very fast, the beaten yolk of an egg. Stir just half a minute after the egg goes into the boiling mixture.

STRAWBERRY CUSTARD

Separate four eggs, put one pint of milk in a double boiler, beat the yolks of the eggs and four tablespoonfuls of sugar until light, add them to the milk; stir constantly until the thickness of cream; take from the fire and stand aside to cool. Beat the whites of the eggs until stiff, add to them four tablespoonfuls of sugar and beat again until stiff and white. Pour about a pint of strawberries into a glass dish, pour over the custard, heap the whites in spoonfuls over the top, dust with sugar, stand in the oven a minute to brown. Serve icy cold.

FRUIT WITH ICE CREAM

Make some vanilla ice cream and have ready some fruit cooked in syrup that has been kept on ice. Pile up the ice cream in border fashion on an ice cold dish, fill the centre with the fruit complete, garnish with little sprigs of maidenhair fern and crystalized violets.

There is no reason why persons with defective vision need disfigure their faces by wearing glasses of unsightly shape, entirely out of harmony with the contour of their features. There is style in glasses just as there is style in everything else to wear. There is some style of mounting that is "just the thing for your face" if you can only find it, and we make frequent visits to the leading factories, and keep pace with all the improvements in mountings and lens grinding. LESSONS IN LOVE

A Short Story

"Up stage, please, Miss Truman!" shouted the stage manager, waving a packet of papers at a frightened-looking girl, who, as the directions came across the empty stalls, appeared more bewildered than ever. "Please, oh, for goodness' sake, move. Don't stand there like a statue. I said 'on stage!'" roared Jordan, stamping his foot, as Barbara Truman came a little nearer to the footlights.

"I do not know what 'up stage' means, Mr. Jordan," she said gently.

A laugh rose from the group of actors and actresses leaning against a pile of scenery on the otherwise bare stage, and one tall, handsome man laughed a little louder than the others and turned to the stage manager's wife, whispered, and then a woman's titter of amusement was heard. Barbara grew hotter and hotter.

"Don't know what 'up stage' means! Good heavens, woman, this won't do for us! Go off; we must get on with the next scene. Hi! Next scene, please," Jordan called to a few stage hands standing ready to shift a few benches, wooden boxes, and chairs, which at first rehearsals represented marble terraces, rustic arbors, and waterfall.

Slowly, almost dazed by the bullying, Barbara walked off the stage, her eyes full of tears, and her tiny hands clenched together. This was her first time on the stage, whither she had come from necessity, and assistance, as far as instructions went, of the actor playing lead. Norman Masters had told her that she would make a splendid actress and that her life was being wasted in toiling at home giving music lessons to unwilling pupils.

Norman Masters, also, had slowly but surely won a little corner of her heart during the three months he had boarded with her widowed mother. But the advent of the handsome and fascinating actor had been far from welcomed by Ralph Sykes, a reserved young man, who was the only other paying guest in Mrs. Brewster's household. He was a struggling doctor, with his way to make, so that he crushed his love for Barbara down into his heart, where it refused to die, however, but flourished and grew apace.

Ralph knew Barbara was young and thirsting for a life which would take her away from all drudgery and he was not surprised when he heard of her engagement as a "walk on" at the new theatre. The words "up stage" beat into Barbara's brain as being utterly meaningless and even as she was pondering over them she heard Jordan talking to Norman on the other side of the stage exit, near which she was standing.

"Why, man, she can't understand the simplest directions! Whatever made you bring her here? I thought she had some experience. All she's fit for is to be knocked into shape by some touring panto. company. There's no time in a big theatre to train youth and beauty; we're not kindergarten," added Jordan, exhausting all his energies in the speech, and pausing to take another breath.

"For that matter, she pestered the life out of me to introduce her. I gave in because life was becoming intolerable, and I didn't want to shift my quarters—her mother makes particularly good coffee," answered Norman languidly, as he strolled away to answer his cue.

Barbara felt as though her cup of misery was full to overflowing, and tired, hungry and strung up to breaking point, the tears insisted upon coming. Slowly they ran down her face as she thought of the words she had just heard—"Pestered the life out of me!" As she remembered the sentence she imagined she must be in some ugly dream. Why, it had been Norman who had suggested going upon the stage! He had never allowed an opportunity to pass of persuading her to enter upon the new life and of painting glowing colours.

"All ladies to go slowly up stage when Mr. Masters comes down terrace. Yes, that's right. Thank heavens someone knows that it's the back of the stage I mean!" shouted Mr. Jordan once more. But the information as to the meaning of the words which caused Barbara's downfall did not interest the girl now, and she watched the proceedings listlessly, longing to run away and forget that such a place as the theatre had ever existed.

Presently the scene was over, and, to Barbara's surprise, Norman came over to her side. "Well, Miss Brewster, and how are you enjoying this play work?" he asked patronizingly.

"Not at all, Mr. Masters," answered Barbara, trying to speak casually. "I should not call it 'play work.' I think it is the hardest task I have ever experienced. I ache all over with the fatigue."

"Pooh! That's nothing. You'll soon get used to it. Aren't you glad I suggested this new life for you?" asked Masters irritably, an angry glean in his eyes.

"No; and I am glad to hear you say that you were responsible for me coming here. Just now I thought you said that I had pestered the life out of you. Oh, why—why did you bring me here?" And Barbara held out her hands as though begging for one comforting word from the man before her. Norman Masters bit his lips, and his eyes grew dark with anger.

"Eavesdroppers never hear—well, you knew the rest. As to why I persuaded you to come into the same company as myself, the explanation is an easy one. I wanted to flirt with you, amuse myself with the heart of a thoroughly unsophisticated girl. Also, my friend Ralph Sykes, I wanted to spoil his pretty love dream, for no other reason than mere dislike of the book devouring man, and so I thought it might prove an amusing pastime to—er—put a spoke in his wheel. But both proved dull. You could not, or would not, flirt, and Ralph Sykes seemed to keep out of the game altogether, so I became bored."

"You—cad!" Barbara faltered, her white lips trembling.

"Ar, well," laughed Norman, as though amused, "your mother will miss the cad's money, for he leaves her select house to-night," and turning upon his heel, he disappeared through a stage exit.

An hour later still found Barbara standing in the wings, weary and miserable, and waiting for permission to go. The last scene of the play was about to commence, and a heavy piece of scenery was being let down from the flies. It was a gigantic bridge from which the hero, Norman Masters, was to dive to save the heroine from drowning. It was the only scenery that was ready, and it remained poised in mid-air so that no time should be lost in lowering it down on the stage.

Barbara watched the huge thing swaying slowly above the hero's head as he rehearsed his preliminary lines, and shuddered as she thought of the possibility of its falling. But she soon forgot all about it in the misery of her shattered dreams. Norman did not care for her, and he had failed her in the hour of need, when one little word of praise might have weighed the scales in her favour. She knew that her love was dead.

"What's that creaking?" one stage hand suddenly asked another, looking up as he spoke. Barbara gazed at the bridge instinctively, but it appeared to be quite stationary. "There it is again," muttered the man.

"You've got the umps, Bill—that's wot it is," observed his companion carelessly.

"Lower the bridge!" broke in Jordan's shout; and instantly the men in the flys lowered the ropes. "Out of the way! Out of the way, Masters!" shrieked the manager, as the scenery began to move. But the warning came too late, for there was a mighty rending of ropes, and, with a crash which seemed to shake the building, the scenery plunged on the stage, the ropes breaking like threads. Barbara covered her eyes with her hands, feeling sick with horror. Presently she became conscious that someone was bending over the injured man, but a curious noise was ringing in her ears, and people around her became like shadows.

"He will live, but only to be a cripple for the rest of his life," said a familiar voice in professional tones, and, looking up as though in a dream, Barbara saw Ralph Sykes. With a little moan she fell forward, and he caught her in his arms.

A month later Barbara was sitting in her mother's tiny drawing-room, watching a departing pupil down the road, and she failed to hear the door open and shut softly. "Dreaming?" a quiet voice asked her, and she found Ralph standing beside her.

"Yes," she answered simply, but she wondered why her heart beat so quickly. "I am wondering what I am to do when all my pupils grow too advanced for me. I have not even the stage as an alternative now," she added in a low voice.

"I wonder how you would like to be a pupil instead?" And Ralph looked tenderly at the fragile form.

"A pupil?" she echoed.

"Yes—to learn the lesson of love." Barbara's cheeks grew pink, and her hands trembled.

"I don't—know," she murmured. Ralph imprisoned her hands in his.

"Might I give you an example of my teaching?" he asked, softly

"Yes," came the low answer; "but I think you have already taught me a little."

Ralph took her in his arms, and she nestled her head on his shoulders. "My pupil—for ever and ever! My sweetheart—the girl I love!" he whispered.

SAVED FROM AN OPERATION

By Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Peoria, Ill.—"I wish to let every one know what Lydia E. Pinkham's remedies have done for me. For two years I suffered. The doctors said I had tumors, and the only remedy was the surgeon's knife. My mother bought me Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and today I am a healthy woman. For months I suffered from inflammation, and your Sanative Wash relieved me. Your Liver Pills have no equal as a cathartic. Any one wishing proof of what your medicines have done for me can get it from any druggist or by writing to me. You can use my testimonial in any way you wish, and I will be glad to answer letters."—Mrs. Christina Reed, 105 Mound St., Peoria, Ill.

Another Operation Avoided.

New Orleans, La.—"For years I suffered from severe female troubles. Finally I was confined to my bed and the doctor said an operation was necessary. I gave Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial first, and was saved from an operation."—Mrs. Lily Peyroux, 1111 Kerlerec St., New Orleans, La.

The great volume of unsolicited testimony constantly pouring in proves conclusively that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is a remarkable remedy for those distressing feminine ills from which so many women suffer.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON QUESTIONS

AUGUST 27, 1911.

(Copyright, 1910, by Rev. T. S. Linscott, D.D.)

Judah Carried Captive to Babylon.—Jer. xxxix.

Golden Text—Be sure your sin will find you out.—Num. xxxii., 23.

1. Verses 1-2—When a historian gives the day, the month, and the year an event took place, and associates his facts with some other well-known fact, how much weight does that give to the credibility of his story?

2. How long did the siege of Jerusalem last before the city was captured?

3. What were the chief means by which the city was taken? (See 2 Kings xxv., 3.)

4. Verse 3—What was the real reason for the downfall of Judah and the capture of Jerusalem?

5. When a nation gives itself up to a life of sin how much risk is there in prophesying its downfall unless it repents?

6. If the "princes" of the soul memory, conscience, will power, and the reverence of God, forsake their position at the gate of the citadel, what other princes are certain to take their places?

7. Verse 4—Sinners are generally very brave when in health and prosperity, but when trouble, or death, stares them in the face what generally happens?

8. Was there a time, and when, that Zedekiah could have taken such steps as would have kept him on his throne and made himself and people prosperous and happy (See 2nd Chron. xxxvi. 11-13).

9. What is the Golden Text for to-day, and what is the proof that sin will finally destroy happiness and true prosperity?

10. Verse 5—Zedekiah fled from the enemy, but was overtaken; when does the time come in the life of a sinner when his habits have become like his shadow, which he cannot outrun?

11. Verses 6-7—What had been the crime against Nebuchadnezzar of which Zedekiah was guilty? What would be the penalty of a similar crime to-day?

12. What was Zedekiah's sin against God, and that of the other bad kings of Judah who had preceded him?

13. What was Zedekiah's punishment?

14. See Jer. xxxiv., 3; Ezek. xii., 13, where the fate of Zedekiah is foretold, and compare with v. 7, and point out a striking fulfilment and explanation of apparently contradictory prophecy?

15. Verse 8—Why is it in God's moral government that the innocent often have to suffer, as well as the guilty?

16. Verses 9-10—What class of people did they carry away to Babylon and what class allow to remain in Judah?

17. What part of a man's nature does sin destroy, and what part does it leave?

18. Verses 11-14—What did the king of Babylon do for Jeremiah, and what is generally the final lot of a man of God?

19. Verse 15—What good had Ebed-melech done to be so signally favoured of God? (See Jer. xxxviii., 7-13.)

20. What reason is there to think that God never forgets a good deed done to one of his children?

This is one of the questions which may be answered in writing by members of the Club.

Lesson for Sunday, September 3, 1911—Review.

A TERRIBLE RECORD OF CHILDREN'S DEATHS

As every mother knows the death rate of little ones in Canada during the hot summer months far exceeds that of any other season of the year. The reason for this is that the excessive heat brings on those dreaded troubles, cholera infantum, diarrhoea, dysentry and other stomach and bowel complaints. These come on so quickly and with such little warning that often baby is beyond help before the mother realizes he is ill. During the hot summer months the mother must be continually on her guard to see that baby's bowels are working regularly and his little stomach is kept sweet and pure. Baby's Own Tablets should always be kept in the house as they are the mother's greatest friend. A dose now and then will prevent these troubles, or if they do come on suddenly they will be quickly banished by the Tablets. The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

THE OLDEST FLAG

The flag of Denmark, a plain red banner bearing on it a white cross, is the oldest flag now in existence. For 300 years both Norway and Sweden were united with Denmark under this flag. In the year 1219 King Waldemar of Denmark, when leading his troops to battle against the Livonians, saw, or thought he saw, a bright light in the form of a cross in the sky. He held this appearance to be a promise of Divine aid, and pressed forward to victory. From this time he had the cross placed on the flag of his country, and called it the Dannebork—that is, strength of Denmark.

STATUE OF THE KING

Mr. Arthur Rogers, A.R.C.A., is now engaged upon the creation of a colossal bronze statue of King George V. This, mounted upon a lofty pedestal, will stand at the summit of the main steps leading to the grounds of the Crystal Palace this his Majesty will seem to be always overlooking the Festival of the Empire. The King will be represented wearing his Coronation robes, and holding his sceptre in his hand. The sculptor was a prominent pupil at the Manchester School of Arts.

BELIEVES IN SOCIALISM

"I am still a Socialist," writes Mr. Robert Blatchford in the Clarion. "I still believe that Socialism is the only hope of the workers. But I am opposed to all forms of superstitious religion. I regard the Bible as an untrue and harmful book and the churches as impediments to human progress."

Moist Heat is the Natural Heat

YOUR HOUSE WILL "FEEL" WARMER AT 65° WITH MOIST AIR THAN AT 70° WITH DRY

Door Open to fill pan.

Either door may be used.

Adding moisture to the air in your home will give you the same heat for less fuel.
A consideration, no doubt.
But that is not all.
Warm dry air, however pure, is not healthful. The human body demands more moisture than is carried in the winter air.
The "Hecla" supplies this moisture in plenty. A large circular pan of water is placed where it will be easy to fill and where it will not be overlooked.

Circular Water Pan

Has five times the evaporating surface of pans placed over furnace door. Runs clear around the back of the furnace. Will hold enough water to last 24 hours. May be filled at either door, as shown above.

No Gas or Dust.

And it is just as important to keep the air free from coal gas and dust.
In the "Hecla" every place where experience has shown that gas might otherwise find an outlet, has been fused absolutely tight by our patented process. The same fused joints keep out the dust and smoke.

"Hecla" Furnace

SAVES ONE TON OF COAL IN SEVEN.

By actual test the "Hecla" saves one ton of coal in seven. That is, it is so constructed as to give the same heat for six tons of coal as you ever got from seven.
Do you want to know more about this furnace?

TWO YOUNG WOMEN IN EXCITING DUEL

Terrible Battle Between Italian Girls Near the Italian Royal Palace in Settling a Love Affair

Rarely has such an exciting duel been fought as that which took place recently between two young women of the criminal classes at the entrance to the Villa Borghese, a short distance from the palace of Queen Margherita. The principals in this extraordinary combat were Angelina Fabiani and Pasqualina Nobili, respectively 20 and 24 years of age, both natives of the Abruzzi, and they were assisted in the duel by nine men, three on one side and six on the other. The quarrel began as far back as May, 1910, when Fabiani having "stolen" Nobili's lover, the latter revenged herself by stabbing her rival. Nobili went to prison, and as soon as she was released she swore to get even with Fabiani, chiefly because, contrary to the custom among criminals, she had revealed the name of her assailant. As soon as she came out of prison she began to search for Fabiani. Her industry was rewarded when she met Fabiani and her lover in the Piazza Colonna. Compliments were exchanged, and in the end Fabiani's lover struck Nobili, who thereupon challenged her rival to a "rustic duel." The challenge was accepted. At the appointed hour the combatants and their respective "suites" were on the spot. They faced each other for a moment, holding long knives in their hands. A particularly gross insult from Fabiani stung Nobili to fury, and bounding forward like a tigress, she plunged her knife up to the handle into Fabiani's abdomen. In spite of the terrible wound thus inflicted, Fabiani continued to battle, and the two women slashed blindly at each other. Meanwhile the seconds or the supporters of the two infuriated women were becoming anxious to take part in the battle. The friends of Nobili were armed with knives; those of Fabiani with cudgels. Soon the cudgels were whirling in the air, dealing blows on backs, arms, and legs, while the men with the knives sought in vain to get to close quarters with their opponents. Nobili clenched with Fabiani and bit her severely in the right wrist. Then her cavaliers, finding that they could not overcome their adversaries' cudgels, gave up the contest and rushed along the Via Vineto. Fabiani's supporters gave chase. While all this was happening not a policeman had appeared in sight. While Nobili was washing her face at a neighboring fountain two policemen came up and arrested her, as well as her supporters, who had returned. Fabiani was taken, in a desperate condition, to the hospital, where at first she refused to say how she had come by her terrible wounds. But finally the whole of the drama came to light, and Fabiani's supporters were also arrested.

THE GUILLOTINE IN PARIS

They Who Murdered Baker Girls Are to Pay the Penalty

The guillotine has been requisitioned again in Paris for the execution of a murderer. The execution took place at Vitry le François, where a man called Deviot paid the death penalty for the murder of a baker girl, Antoinette Ketter, near Vitry. By a curious coincidence another man named Philippo, is to be executed at Saint Mihiel for the murder of two baker girls, on which account he was described as "L'Assassin des Boulangeres." Both men seem to have thought that baker girls, after they had collected money from their customers, were good quarry. In one case one of the murderers found a sum of $400 in the possession of the murdered girl. Deviot, after committing this crime, fled to Rouen, where he was captured and tried. He applied to the President of the Republic for a reprieve, but this was not granted.

GUN FIRED BY THE SUN

Parisian Cannon was Almost as Reliable as a Clock

The old gun at the Palais Royal, Paris, which is fired, we are told, by the heat of the sun's rays at noon by means of a lens, has, for the first time in many years, gone off exactly at noon. The heat of the sun, it is explained, was such that the moment its rays, when exactly over the meridian, touched the glass, the gun went off. People who were in the garden with watches in their hands to count the minutes, were astonished. One old man said that it was the first time in his life that he had witnessed such a thing. The sun, he said, usually takes from five to ten minutes at least, and sometimes more, to set the gun off. Few people, as a rule, pay attention to the old gun at the Palais Royal for this very reason. While the heat continued the gun was almost as reliable as a railway clock.

TRAINING OF THE PRINCE

He Will Rough It on the War Ship With Boys of His Own Age

Albert Edward, Prince of Wales, heir to the throne of England, as midshipman on the Hindustan, gets a little less than $3 per week, and must work from seven to six. This is the second stage in the prescribed course of training for the future ruler of the United Kingdom. Here he will mess in the gun-room of the old battleship with boys of his own age; will prepare himself for the examinations he will have to pass, in company with his mates, for a higher position in the navy, and will learn the strict discipline that has been so thoroughly inculcated in the present King. Whether or not the Prince will take to the rigors of the sea with the same delight that characterized his father's naval training is a matter of conjecture. He has, while on land, displayed a love for rough and ready sport that has been the delight of King George, and has endeared him to the British people.

FOR 25 YEARS HE SUFFERED

Well Known Merchant Of Sarnia Cured by "Fruit-a-tives"

SARNIA, ONT., Feb. 5th, 1910.

"I have been a sufferer for the past 25 years with Constipation, Indigestion and Catarrh of The Stomach. I tried many remedies and many doctors but derived no benefit whatever.

Finally I read an advertisement of "Fruit-a-tives". I decided to give "Fruit-a-tives" a trial and found they did exactly what was claimed for them.

I have now taken "Fruit-a-tives" for some months and find that they are the only remedy that does me good.

I have recommended "Fruit-a-tives" to a great many of my friends and I cannot praise these fruit tablets too highly"

PAUL J. JONES

Thousands now use "Fruit-a-tives". Thousands more will try Fruit-a-tives" after reading the above letter. It proves, beyond the shadow of a doubt, that at last there is a cure for Constipation and Stomach Troubles.

"Fruit-a-tives" is Nature's cure for these diseases, being made of fruit juices and valuable tonics

BIRDS LOST IN THE AIR

Men may be lost in trackless forests, boys become ignorant of their whereabouts in large woods, and whole expeditions go astray in the desert; so it is not a very surprising thing that birds may be, and actually are, frequently "lost" in the air.

The bird, storm-driven, loses its bearings, and over and over again cases have been known of birds floating aimlessly about in the air, weak and hopelessly bewildered. Instinct prompts them to keep flying as long as they are above water, but when lost in mid-ocean they are at length bound to be overcome by exhaustion and lack of nourishment. A liner bound for New York once came across a huge white owl, which dropped on to it in a terribly weak condition, though the crew managed to nurse it back to health.

DIAMONDS IN HEAPS

Most of the Largest Ones Have Been Found Accidentally

Diamonds to the value of $30,000,000 are extracted from Kimberley annually. Everything impresses you at the mines except the diamonds. Shaken by machines on to greased tables, over which dirty water is constantly passing, they have no lustre in their raw state, and even when seen in heaps of all sizes on the office counters, it is impossible to think of Hatton Garden cheques.

Passing envy is followed by wonder that minerals so plentiful and so cheaply extracted (the cost may be given roughly as $1.40 per load, and the yield $8.90 per load) should be the coveted hall-mark of wealth and fashion. There is infinitely more beauty in a wayside flower—until you see the cut diamond fashioned at Amsterdam. They have a box of finished diamonds at the Kimberley offices of De Beers.

It is a strange thing that most of the largest diamonds have been found by accident. This was the case with the great Cullinan diamond, which an overseer discovered by accident.

"TOM BROWN'S" BIRTHDAY

The Hero of the Famous Fight Preaches Every Sunday

The hero of one of the finest books for boys ever written has celebrated the eighty-seventh anniversary of his birthday. The Rev. Augustus Orlebar, vicar of Wellington, Bedfordshire, for nearly fifty-three years, is the original of Tom Brown, whose fight with "the Slogger" is so vividly described in "Tom Brown's Schooldays." Mr. Orlebar remembers the encounter very well.

It is not claimed that he represents Tom Brown in any other respect, but he was the Rugby boy who at cover-point caught out the redoubtable batsman in the cricket match against the Marylebone team described in the same story. Hughes, afterwards the judge, was captain of the eleven when he put Orlebar into the team, and Orlebar himself was captain when Dr. Arnold died in 1842.

Despite his age, Mr. Orlebar, as he has always done, enjoys good health. He preaches every Sunday and looks after the Parish generally. Mr. Orlebar is a non-smoker, but not a teetotaler.

GREATLY EXAGGERATED

She had been at the seaside and in the country for the holidays, and her industrious fiancé had been working and waiting for her during the long, long days. Now she had returned, and he had been hearing many things of her, and was sore displeased.

"They tell me," he said, painfully, "that you flirted desperately with no fewer than six men."

Her cheeks flushed and her eyes blazed. "Who told you that?" she asked, angrily.

"Several people. It has been common talk."

Her anger gave way to sobs. "Oh, Frank," she pleaded, as she flung herself on his neck, "it isn't true—it isn't true."

A great load was lifted from his heart. "No, Frank," she went on, "it isn't true; there were only four."

PREFER BIG CLOTHES

The male portion of our United States visitors (says the Tailor and Cutter) might generally pass as native-born subjects of this country if it were not for their obtrusively easy-fitting garments. The United States is a big country, and many of her subjects seem to prefer looking a few sizes larger than Nature intended them to be. Their coats are usually cut about four inches larger than they ought to be, and then built up with wadding and haircloth until there is a semblance of outline agreeable to the American idea of largeness.

Cured His Rheumatism In Three Weeks.

Rev. Father Morrissey

James LeB. Johnstone, a prominent member of the Citizen's Band, of Chatham, writes:

"I contracted Rheumatism by exposure, five years ago, and was ailing for two months and in great pain all the time. I got Father Morrissey's No. 7 Tablets and took them for about three weeks, when the Rheumatism all left me and I have had no return of the pains since."

Father Morrissey's "No. 7" Tablets have cured thousands of this terribly painful disease.

Rheumatism is generally brought on by exposure, but is really caused by Uric Acid in the blood. This Uric Acid is an irritating poison, formed from the waste matter of the body. The kidneys should remove it, but when they fail it poisons the blood, and, settling in the joints, causes Rheumatism.

"No. 7" Tablets clear out the clogged-up Kidneys and stimulate them to perform their task of filtering the Uric Acid out of the blood. When this is done the Rheumatism simply and naturally vanishes.

"No 7" Tablets cost 50c. At your dealer's. 28

O'Keefe's PILSENER LAGER

"The Beer With A Reputation" Is Better Than Any Imported Lager

"Imported" does not mean "better". It simply means "higher prices" because of the excessive duty.

It is a Government regulation that all Canadian lagers must be brewed only from barley malt, hops and water,—which cannot be said of any American lager.

O'Keefe's "Pilsener" costs about half as much as imported brands—and is their superior in every respect—in purity, in flavor, in wholesomeness.

Are you going to pay a higher price for a poorer lager —or are you going to insist on having O'Keefe's?

Leading dealers, hotels and cafes have O'Keefe's.

ADVENTURES of the WORLD'S GREAT DETECTIVES

By George Barton

The Story of the Wax Impression-

An Episode in the career of Thomas F. Byrnes the Great Inspector of Police.....

COPYRIGHT 1911 BY W.G.CHAPMAN.

SHINBURN ESCAPED WHILE THE DETECTIVE SLEPT

IT'S THE PROOF OF THE CRIME," HE SAID TERSELY.

(This is one of a new series of stories concerning adventures that have occurred in the lives of the world's greatest detectives. Mr. Barton has gathered his material from real life, but in some cases imaginary names have been substituted for real ones, simply as a matter of justice to the innocent descendants of criminals mentioned in the narrative. Permissible liberties have been taken in the compiling and arrangement of these fact stories, but in all that is essential they may be regarded as human documents of extreme interest and value.—The Editor.)

On the night of the fifteenth of April, 1903, the First National Bank of Middleburg, at Middleburg, N. Y., was entered and robbed of a large sum of money. It was the climax to a series of audacious bank burglaries committed under circumstances that led the authorities to believe that all of them were the work of an especially successful gang of bank thieves.

Thomas F. Byrnes, the greatest chief inspector of police that New York has ever known was in authority at that time and all of the facts in the case were laid before him. In the meantime complaints were coming in from other quarters. Robberies had been successfully pulled off at the Phoenix bank of Phoenix, N. Y.; the National Bank of Pawling, Pawling, N. Y.; the St. Hyacinth bank of West Farnham, Ontario, and the Thomaston National bank of Thomaston, Conn.

Superintendent Byrnes probably knew the methods of bank burglars better than any man in the United States, with the possible exception of William A. Pinkerton, and he began a study of the evidence in hand with the hope of determining the identity of the man who was directly concerned in this series of bold burglaries. Most bank crooks depend upon the use of dynamite and nitroglycerine to break open safes and vaults. The master hand in the cases under investigation used more refined means of accomplishing his purpose. The robberies had evidently been engineered, if not accomplished, personally by a man who had the brain and the touch to beat all known combinations.

That man, it was finally determined, was Max Shinburn, one of the most notorious and most successful criminals the world has ever known. The problem now was to catch Shinburn and directly connect him with one of the burglaries. The resources of thief takers fortunately are greater than those of the thieves. The life and adventures of this famous burglar was soon compiled and laid before the authorities for their guidance.

Max Shinburn was a German by birth and had come to the United States during the Civil war. He was a good mechanic and secured employment with one of the leading safe manufacturers of this country. He remained with the concern for several years and in that time became a most expert safe man. He had, especially, a perfect knowledge of the mechanism of combination locks.

Thus equipped, he left the company and began his career of crime. At that time the safes made by the concern with which he had been employed were in use in every part of America. With an ingenuity that was almost diabolical, he began operations on the safes of his own company. His pals had the greatest admiration for Shinburn and were fond of saying that he had elevated burglary from a trade to a profession. It might have been added that he was one of the few burglars who actually learned his trade. He had served an apprenticeship with the safe company and took the knowledge thus acquired and ungratefully used it against his benefactors.

One of the curious side lights in this connection was the failure of the safe company. Shinburn's success in breaking into their safes drove the concern out of business. He knew the banks and financial institutions that had purchased safes from his old company, and in committing his burglaries he always grimly gave these his preference. When it became known that the one-time expert of the safe company and the audacious safe breaker were one and the same person, the company found it practically impossible to dispose of any more of their products.

One of Shinburn's most brilliant achievements—if disreputable business can be mentioned in this manner—was his robbery of the vaults of the Lehigh and Wilkesbarre Coal company at White Haven, Pa., in 1867. He broke into the office at night and with a twist of the wrist managed to open the safe. There was, however, less than six thousand dollars in money there at the time. Shinburn expected to make a big haul and he was so thoroughly disgusted that he only took a few hundred dollars and left the balance of money in the safe. The effect of this may be imagined. The officers of the coal company promptly suspected that some of their clerks had been stealing, and it is said that one of the men was finally dismissed. Shinburn made a second visit and this time there was a still smaller amount of money in the safe. His disgust was in proportion to his disappointment and he left without taking a penny. On the third and last visit, however, he made a big haul. There was something like $60,000 in money in the safe, besides a large quantity of negotiable bonds and other securities. This time he took everything in sight. The Pinkertons were put on the case, but the clever crook managed to elude them.

One year before the White Haven affair he broke into the Walpole Savings bank of Walpole, N. H., and stole a large sum of money and bonds. He was arrested at Saratoga with seven or eight bonds in his possession. The evidence was conclusive. He was promptly convicted and sentenced to ten years in the New Hampshire state prison. He accepted the verdict submissively, but on his way to prison he slipped away from his captors and no trace of him was obtained for a long while afterwards. The White Haven affair was just one year old when the Pinkertons took Shinburn on Broadway.

They proceeded to convey their prisoner to Pennsylvania where he could be tried for the White Haven offence. They knew that they had an ingenious and desperate criminal on their hands and that it would be unsafe to take any chances with him. To make assurance doubly sure he was handcuffed to two detectives. He was guarded every minute of the day and night. Among other things, he was compelled to sleep handcuffed to his guards. Each night his clothing was taken from him and locked in a separate room which was used by a Pinkerton man. The detectives were in no haste to turn him over to the authorities. They were anxious to obtain enough evidence against him to put him in prison for the remainder of his life. Accordingly he was kept at a hotel where the third degree and various other methods used by the police were utilized with more or less effect.

Shinburn was almost childlike in his demeanor toward his captors. He had a charming personality and talked engagingly. In other words, he possessed that quality which, for want of a better name, we call magnetism. This made the relations between the criminal and his captors rather agreeable. They liked him, but they did not relax any of their precautions.

One night, however, just before he was handcuffed to his detective guard, Shinburn secretly inserted the point of his plain gold scarf pin in the ratchet of the handcuff. The lock had not caught perfectly when snapped, and in the middle of the night Shinburn managed to open the handcuff, slipped it off his wrist and crept away naked from his sleeping companion. To complete his triumph, he entered the room of the other detective, stole his clothes and escaped with ease. The detectives were chagrined over this incident. The authorities were furious, but down in their secret hearts the police could not help but have a certain kind of admiration for this man who made thieves like Claude Duval and Jack Sheppard appear like bungling amateurs.

Byrnes sat in his office apparently oblivious to Mr. Shinburn's movements. But he was watching him like a hawk. After the sensational escape of the famous criminal, the inspector learned that he had gone to Belgium and was posing there as a baron.

"Why not go after him?" suggested one of the headquarters men.

"No," answered the great thief taker, "we're not quite ready for him yet."

"But we can induce him to come over here and then bag him."

"It's not necessary. He'll come back. They all do."

Shinburn is said to have been a man of good birth. At all events he was well educated and talked several languages. As a consequence of this equipment he carried out his new role with perfection. He had a large estate just outside of Brussels, probably purchased with the money that he had stolen from half a dozen banks in America. He entertained on a large scale and spent his money lavishly. Most of his guests believed that he was a titled person who had the right to move in aristocratic society. Those who did suspect the man were helpless. No extradition treaty existed between Belgium and the United States at that time and so he was suffered to live in peace and honor on his ill gotten gains.

He was restless, however. He had all the money that he needed to keep him comfortably in any one of the European countries. But that was not enough; he wanted more. He began to speculate in the London and Berlin stock markets, and in a little while the stock brokers cleaned him out. It has been cynically said that they did to him what he did to the financial institutions of America.

Failing to obtain money lawfully, he turned to his trade as a duck turns to water. He organized a gang to do business in Belgium, and planned to break the safe of the provincial bank of Vivers. His chief associate in this enterprise was a thief named Bullard, who had worked with him for many years in America. In this case "the operation was a success, but the patient died." That is to say, they opened the safe successfully, secured the money and got out of the building, but were arrested before they could make a complete "get-away." Shinburn engaged high priced lawyers and made a desperate legal fight, but was finally sentenced to five years, which he served.

After that he became a gambler, going from one resort to another in Europe. Finally he became tired of the old world, shook its dust from his feet and returned to this country. He little knew it at the time, but in doing this he was leading up to his farewell in the burglary business. He had not been here very long when he robbed a small bank in the interior of New York state. This started the Pinkertons on his track actively. He went to Philadelphia, and a certain operation in that city put the Quaker City authorities on their guard. Frank Kelly, one of the greatest bank detectives in the world, got in pursuit of Shinburn.

In the meantime the superintendent of Scotland Yard and the chief of the Paris secret service were itching to lay hands on the clever German-American. Chief Inspector Byrnes, sitting in his office on Mulberry street, waited patiently for the big criminal to come into his outspread net. The importance of the man, therefore, may be understood when it is known that five of the greatest thief takers in the world were looking for him at the same time.

The climax came after his robbery of a comparatively small bank. Byrnes wanted to catch him with undisputed evidences of his guilt. He could command money so readily and he engaged such brilliant legal advocates that it might prove fruitless to arrest him merely on suspicion or on account of his bad record. So the inspector was eager for the sort of proof that would stand in a court of law. The rogue even pretended that he was not Shinburn, but that he was really a titled nobleman. The police waited for the slip which every thief makes.

It came quicker than they expected.

One morning Shinburn was discovered hurrying away from the neighborhood of a bank that had been robbed. The police arrested him on general principles. He was searched, but nothing of an incriminating nature was found on him. Before releasing him they telegraphed to Superintendent Byrnes. The inspector directed them to detain the prisoner and then hastened to give the baron his personal attention. The interview between the two men was a clash of keen minds. Neither one gained advantage.

After that Byrnes made a careful examination of the stuff that had been found in the baron's possession. It was very commonplace. In fact, it resembled the junk that a small boy carries in his pockets. There were a few dollars in bank notes, a small amount of change in silver and coppers, a time table on the Erie railroad, a bit of wax such as housewives use to polish their irons, a card case, a bit of string and a couple of fish hooks.

Surely some one of these things contained the germ of a thrilling detective story. The local police said no. Byrnes examined each particular thing in his impassive way. The brown eyes seemed sleepy and indifferent. One thing after another was tossed aside. But when he reached the bit of wax his eyes brightened and he became the man of action.

"What is it?" asked one of his assistants.

"It's the proof of the crime," he said tersely.

"But it's only a bit of ordinary wax."

The chief smiled indulgently.

"That's where you're mistaken," he said. "A close examination will show you that it differs from every other bit of wax that ever existed."

"How?" was the incredulous inquiry.

"Well, for instance, it has the impression of the top of a screw."

"What next?"

"Next, find the screw."

They did. They found it on the sidewalk between the police station and the bank. The screw fitted the lock plate of the door of the bank, and the hole from which it was taken was filled with wax that corresponded with the bit found in Shinburn's pocket. Thus, the man who had made a fortune by his wits and outwitted the police of two continents, was finally betrayed by a piece of wax.

Sixteen years was the sentence imposed by the judge. So far as is shown by the records it ended the career of the burglar-baron, the man who had entertained royalty and who lived alternately in a prison and a castle.

The Pinkertons arrested Shinburn more than once. Chief Inspector Byrnes had the honor of entertaining him in the Tombs. Many other detectives claimed to have "taken" the great criminal at one time or another. Byrnes used to say smilingly:

There's glory enough to go around."

Up-to-Date Press.

The latest freak newspaper hails from Madrid, and provides its readers with letterpress that can be read in the dark. The ink is prepared with some preparation of phosphorus. If the method became popular the sensation mongering editor might take undue advantage of this "writing in fire" to emphasize his most lurid headlines. But, after all, the Spanish journalist's appeal is only to the eye, whereas a French journal has gone one better and prints its columns with strictly innocuous ink, on thin sheets of dough, which can be eaten when read, so that the publication can be a feast in a double sense, and food for mind and body alike. To such departures does an up-to-date press commit itself.

Protecting Birds From Cats.

The campaign to bell all cats in the protection of song birds is making great headway in Spokane, Wash. Already a club has been formed, and society women are taking up the cause with enthusiasm. The plan is to attach a small bell with a strap or ribbon on the neck of every cat in the city and suburbs, the argument being that if it were made a custom generally that there would be more birds in Spokane.

High-Class Samoan Dialect.

Robert Louis Stevenson described amusingly how the Samoan noble had a private dialect of his own, quite distinct from the common people's. The ordinary words for an ox, blood, bamboo, a bamboo knife, a pig and an oven were taboo in a noble's presence. And the noble had special words of his own for his leg, face, hair, belly, eyelids, son, daughter and wife, his dwelling, spear, comb, sleep, dreams and anger, his food, his pleasure in eating, his ulcers, cough, sickness, recovery and death, his being carried out on a bier, the exhumation of his bones and his skull after death.

No Girls.

"You didn't stay long at Wombat's country place."

"No, he promised to show me the beauties of his neighborhood and then tried to point out a lot of scenery."

Cotton Growing in California.

Possibly not the least important of developments in the far west is the rise of a new cotton-producing country. Last season upwards of 16,000 bales of cotton were grown in the Imperial and Coachella valleys of California. Estimates of the acreage that will be planted in the same valleys this spring vary from 50,000 to 75,000 acres. Experimental plantings are being made in other sections of California, and it now seems certain that cotton can be grown successfully throughout the great interior valleys of the state. Labor costs considerably more in California than in the southern states, but the yield of cotton per acre is so much greater that cotton growing promises attractive profits.

Well Earned.

Chesterfield told how he got his reputation. "I was polite to an umpire," he said. Herewith they saw courtesy could do no more.

It's easier for a shiftless man to make friends than to make good.

Wall Street's Anchor.

"James R. Keene, at an Easter celebration in Cedarhurst," said a New York broker, "once gave, in a few words, the Wall-street definition of a lamb.

"'A lamb,' said Mr. Keene, 'is one who invests first and investigates afterwards.'"

On Occasion.

"Pop, is it X that is an unknown quantity?"

"I have always found it so, my son, whenever I tried to borrow one."

NEAVE'S FOOD FOR INFANTS

is the RIGHT FOOD for YOUR baby

The strongest argument for your using NEAVE'S FOOD for your baby, is that 80 years experience has proved its value for the youngest and most delicate infant. NEAVE'S FOOD contains all the essentials for flesh and bone forming in an easily digested—assists teething—relieves constipation—and makes baby thrive. Here's what one mother says:

"My baby has been brought up on Neave's Food, of which I cannot speak too highly. My baby did not thrive until I gave him Neave's Food, and he has never had a day's illness since. If anyone asks me what they shall give their babies, I say Neave's Food, and they get on just the same as mine, and thank me for telling them." Mrs. Savory of Bristol.

AFTER THE SPIES

Special Act Proposes Severe Punishment of People Making Defence Sketches

The text of the new Official Secrets Bill, which drastically amends the Official Secrets Act of 1889 and introduces fresh and stringent precautions against espionage and attempts on railways, gas works, and electric light works in and before war, has now been published. It has been introduced in the House of Lords by Lord Haldane, Secretary for War, and is calculated to deal with such incidents as the recent alleged sketching of a Portsmouth fort by a German military officer. The first clause provides that any person who "for any purpose prejudicial to the safety or interests of the State" approaches or is in the neighborhood of any "prohibited places," makes sketches, plans, models, or notes useful to an enemy, or obtains or communicates such information, shall be guilty of felony and be liable to penal servitude for not less than three years or more than seven years. Under the Act of 1889 the offence was a misdemeanor, and the penalty was not more than one year's hard labor except where the offender was proved to have communicated the information or to have intended to communicate it to a foreign State. In that case the offence was felony, with a penalty of not less than one year's hard labor except than penal servitude for life. It is provided in the new Bill though not in the old Act, that a person can be convicted "if from the circumstances of the case or his conduct or his known character as proved, it appears that his purpose was . . . . prejudicial to the safety or interests of the State," and that such a purpose shall be presumed where a sketch is found to have been made or information to have been obtained without official sanction. The third clause is of extreme importance, as it enables a Secretary of State to extend the term "prohibited place" to "any railway, road, way, or channel, or any place used for gas, water, or electricity works," or a wide variety of other places at which an enemy might strike in the event of war. This part of the bill is not to be found in the 1889 Act, and is a new departure.

KING NICHOLAS OF MONTENEGRO

With the war clouds lying low on the Montenegro border, King Nicholas, whose country is sheltering thousands of homeless Albanians, has made public a list of social functions whose diplomatic significance is believed to denote a pacificatory ending of Montenegro's troubles. The King will entertain the British, Russian, German and French ambassadors at a series of dinners and receptions covering a space of some three weeks, and it is believed that the semi-official discussions of the Balkan question arising therefrom will have a tendency toward a better understanding between these powers and Montenegro.

NEW TYPE OF DESTROYER

A Inter-Combustion Engine in Combination With Turbines

One of the twenty torpedo-boat destroyers of the present year's programme, will be of a new type. It will mark the introduction into the Navy, in an experimental form, of the inter-combustion engine for marine propulsion. For some time past oil engines have been used in men-of-war with complete success for driving electric dynamos and for propelling small boats. In the special destroyer which is about to be built the new kind of engine will be fitted in combination with turbines, and thereby not only will valuable experience be obtained, but a vessel will be produced which, it is believed, will have a far greater radius of action than any craft now in the service.

WHAT CAN I DO FOR MY SKIN-TORTURED BABY?

Is the Despairing Cry of Thousands of Mothers. A Scotchwoman Tells How Her Child was Cured.

"What can I do for my skin-tortured baby?" How many worried, worn-out mothers, whose children are suffering with eczema, tetter or other torturing, disfiguring humor, have asked themselves this question! Through neglect or improper treatment, some minor eruption has developed into a distressing and unsightly affliction. Simple treatments fail, and stronger ones are tried, sometimes so harsh that the suffering is increased rather than allayed. Even professional aid has proven useless, and the fear is ever-present that the skin disease will become chronic, turning the child's future into a nightmare of physical and mental misery.

Such mothers, who have witnessed their children's suffering and who have undergone the long, sleepless nights and distracting anxiety which they alone can realize, will understand the gratitude that prompted this letter from Mrs John Ewan, 8, Victoria St., Inverurie, Scotland, and will read it with keenest interest:

"I use Cuticura Soap steadily for my baby's skin. She had the eczema when she was three months old. She was in an awful mess all over her body. We never thought she would get over it. We sat with her night and day for about a month, expecting every minute to see her die. The doctor gave me an ointment to rub her with but it did her no good. My mother was home from America and she told me to try Cuticura Ointment and to wash her with Cuticura Soap. There was a great difference when I used the first box. It seemed to soothe her and she slept. I used three boxes of Cuticura Ointment and she was quite cured. She has the purest skin and is the fattest baby now! She is a miracle, the doctor declares. I am glad to tell anybody about it."

And that the success of the Cuticura Remedies is not confined to the treatment of eczema, is amply proven by Mrs. M. A. Schwerin, 674 Springwells Ave., Detroit, Mich., who writes:

"When my little Vivian was about six months old, her papa had a boil on his forehead. At that time the child was covered with prickly heat and I suppose in scratching it her own head became infected, for it broke out in boils, one after another. She had about sixty in all and I used Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment which cured her of them entirely. We do not think any one can praise Cuticura Remedies too highly."

That mothers may test the efficacy and economy of the Cuticura Remedies for themselves, the Potter Drug and Chem. Corp., 121 Columbus Ave., Boston, Mass., will send free on application, a generous trial box of Cuticura Ointment, sufficient to afford immediate relief in the most distressing forms of eczema, rashes, itchings and scalings of the skin and scalp. Under the influence of Cuticura Ointment, the itching and burning stop, the child falls into a refreshing sleep, the mother rests, and for the first time, perhaps, in many weeks, peace falls on a distracted household. The Cuticura Remedies are sold by druggists everywhere.

TIPS FOR CONDUCTORS

German Passengers Are Liberal with Street Car Fare

A feature that surely must distinguish the street car system of Germany from that of any other country is the practice on the part of a large percentage of passengers of giving the conductor a "tip." The average fare on German street cars, including those of the capital, is two cents; but at a moderate estimate fully one-third of the passengers hand the conductor another cent. This is usually done by ladies, though it is common enough with the men, the idea probably being that of securing the support of the conductor in case of trouble. That the gratuities amount to a considerable sum in the course of a year is shown by a trial in Hamburg, arising out of a dispute between the company and one of its conductors, in which the court assumed the gratuities to amount to nearly $100 each year. The court wisely deduced that the income from tips must be considerable from the fact that very low wages were paid to the conductors in comparison with the motormen.

Mrs. Stanley Brant, Desoronto, Ont., writes:—"My little boy, Stanley, 1½ years old took the Summer Complaint and got so bad as to pass blood. I tried everything I was told would be good for it but to no avail until, at last, I tried Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry, and I am glad to say I only gave him a few doses of it before he was cured."

THE LATEST WORD IN MEDICAL WORLD

Over a Quarter Million Dollars Worth of Radium at the Disposal of the Radium Institute

The Radium Institute, London, which was recently opened, was the darling scheme of the late King Edward, and is the latest word in the medical world. It has over a quarter of a million dollars' worth of radium at its disposal, is fitted with the most expensive and effective medical instruments known to science, and will employ a staff of physicians whose names are known to the medical profession of all countries. Chief among the wonders of this remarkable place in the vast quantity of radium that has been accumulated for use in scientifically treating disease. This accumulation will enable tests never before tried in medical history, and as the chief aim of the new hospital is research, there is every probability that science will be materially advanced as a result of its work. The Institute will be worked in direct connection with the medical profession, and all applications for admittance must come from a doctor. The poor will be treated free of charge; the well-to-do will pay in accordance with their means. In both cases the care and attention bestowed will be identical. With regard to the researches of the institution it may be added that all scientific delvings into the "whys and wherefores" will be made without the assistance of mutilated animal organism. No animals of any kind will be permitted either on the operating table or in the observation cages.

QUEEN WILHELMINA OF HOLLAND

Queen Wilhelmina's well-known admiration for the French gave rise to an amusing incident the other day. The Queen was taking a morning drive when the persistent cries of a beggar attracted her attention. She stopped the carriage and spoke to the man in Dutch. He, though palpably of that origin, refused to answer, repeating time and again in very bad French: "Your Highness, I am a Frenchman. Please help a poor Frenchman." The Queen was so amused by his audacity that she offered him a gold piece if he would renounce his country, whereupon he swore eternal allegiance to Holland and made off.

EXTRAORDINARY SUPERSTITION

Syrians Who Believe it Right to Sacrifice Human Life

A law suit for libel brought by an apothecary in Pollau, Syria, against a young peasant, reveals an extraordinary superstition prevalent among the country people. They believe that apothecaries and doctors have the right to kill at least one man and one woman every year in order to make medicines out of their bodies. An accidental movement of the apothecary at Pollau, when giving medicine to a boy named Puts, led the latter to believe he was going to be killed. He ran away, but got such a fright that he fell ill. The inhabitants believed his story, and boycotted the apothecary, who was at length compelled to prosecute. Puts was sentenced to fourteen days' imprisonment, but his parents, who had spread the story, were acquitted on the ground that they had acted in good faith.

FOUGHT IN A GRAVEYARD

Slovaks and Roumanians Mocked at Each Other's Crosses

A sanguinary free-fight between Slovaks and Roumanians occurred in a cemetery in Hungary the other day, on the occasion of the consecration of two crucifixes there. The cause of this extraordinary collision is thus stated: Both the Slovak and Roumanian inhabitants of the village decided to erect a crucifix in the cemetery, but as they could not agree regarding some trifling details, the parties resolved to raise two crucifixes, which were consecrated simultaneously. The Slovaks mocked at the cross of the Roumanians and vice versa, and after the sermon of the Roumanian Pope a free fight followed, knives, and later, hayforks, being freely used. When the gendarmes succeeded in separating the hostile parties and restoring order thirteen persons were lying in the cemetery seriously wounded. One of the injured died before he could be removed to a hospital.

CHANGING THE WORLD

Look Around You and Examine Your Environment Occasionally

"You cannot change the world; only yourself."

The above saying is apt to be a little misleading. For though the world is so vast, huge, and complex that to change the whole of it in any way would require powers far greater than most of us possess, yet, on the other hand, by changing ourselves we do much towards changing the world. "He who reforms himself has done more to reform the community than a crowd of noisy, impotent talkers." Few of us properly realize the greatness of the influences which we exert, very often unconsciously, on all with whom we are constantly in contact.

When you change yourself, you cannot help but change your influence, and your influence changes others to some extent, and these changes their influence, too—and so on, like the ripples caused by a stone flung into a pond. So if you reform yourself, you are taking a hand in the great task of reforming the world.

"Your world" is your mission-ground. "Your world" is the place where your best work is needed. Your friends, your workmates, above all, your family, are the people who are the most affected by you. To reform yourself is hard, but it is not a hopeless task.

You can alter your whole outlook on life. If you are inclined to be sad and gloomy, you can, by persistently forcing yourself to think cheerfully, in time develop the habit of cheerfulness to such an extent that it becomes second nature to you.

Look around you, and examine your world occasionally. See where a change for the better is most needed, and set to work at once to make that change. Here is one, perhaps, who needs cheering up; go and cheer him. Here is one who seems to want advice; give it to him. Here is one who requires help; let him have any such help as lies in your power to give.

But, above all, look to yourself. Reform, like charity, should begin at home.—Budget and Family Journal.

Police Took No Chances

The Prince of Wales and Princess Mary set out for a motor-car drive in Edinburgh recently. At the end of Princess Street their progress was barred by the lining of the route for the passage of the King and Queen. The royal chauffeur informed the police who the occupants of the car were, but, with true Scotch caution, the constables refused to allow it to pass until some city officials recognised the Prince and Princess.

TO Get Poisons From the Blood

You Have to Depend on the Filtering Process of the Liver and Kidneys. These Organs Alone Can Purify the Blood, and They Do Their Work Well When Helped by

DR. CHASE'S KIDNEY-LIVER PILLS

No medical treatment can possibly purify the blood except as it sets in healthy working order the kidneys, liver and bowels.

To these organs is assigned the duty of filtering from the blood the poisonous waste matter which is left over when the nutritious elements are extracted from the food you eat. If they are not overcrowded or slow and sluggish in action they keep the blood pure and healthy.

For this reason Dr. Chase's Kidney Liver Pills are the most satisfactory treatment you can possibly obtain to purify the blood.

Their effects are prompt, definite and certain. The liver action is quickened, the kidneys are invigorated, the regular movement of the bowels is assured. It is only a matter of a few hours until you begin to feel the benefit of this great medicine. Further use, as often as is necessary to keep these organs active, will cleanse and purify the blood and enable the digestive system to properly do its work.

Backache, headache and bodily pains will disappear, and the fatigue which is an accompaniment of poisons in the system will give way to new vigour and energy. One pill a dose. 25 cents a box, at all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto.

AN INFERNAL MACHINE

How it Was Proposed to Murder a Brussels Magistrate

A serious attempt to murder M. Fromes, a magistrate, by means of an infernal machine has been discovered. A packet, ostensibly containing chocolates, was sent to him by some person unknown. It was found to contain several kilogrammes of explosives, and had this exploded a catastrophe must have followed. An ingenious device had been adopted to secure explosion, and it is remarkable that the package, which was handled several times without the least precaution, did not explode. An inquiry has been opened. The outrage is attributed to motives of revenge.

Instances of Clandestine Thefts from Italy's National Treasures

Despite the law to prevent the disposal of Italy's national art treasures, the clandestine traffic in works of art has not been stopped, although the vigilance of the authorities has done a good deal to keep such illegal sales within narrow limits. Recently the Minister of Instruction was informed that a valuable ancient cross, which had hitherto been preserved in the Church of San Francesco d'Atri, had been secretly transported by the rector to Naples and there sold to a local dealer in antiquities. As a result of active inquiries the precious object was discovered and sequestrated just as it was about to be exported, and the clerical vendor was subsequently arrested and taken before the authorities to explain his illegal action. In another recent instance the Superintendent of Monuments at Pisa heard that an attempt was being made to remove a famous statue known as the Virgin of Agostina de Duccio from the church of the episcopal seminary of Pontremoli. With the assistance of the Sub-Prefect of Pontemoli and the local honorary Inspector of Monuments, the superintendent learned that the rector of the church had concluded a contract for the sale of the statue for $8,000, one of the conditions being that the original was to be replaced by a facsimile, in the hope that the substitute might pass unnoticed. In this case also the rector was brought before the judicial authorities.

CHRISTENING OF PETER

Son of Peter Pan and Godson of J. M. Barrie

St. Peter's Church, Broadstairs, was recently the scene of the christening of Peter, the son of Peter Pan, and godson of M. J. M. Barrie, Peter Pan's creator. Peter John Barrie Waterman was the hero of the occasion. He was born seven months ago to Miss Cecilia Loftus, who is now Mrs. Alouys Waterman, but once played Peter Pan for a season at the Duke of York's Theatre.

It may sound like exaggeration, but a man has almost as many buttons on his suit of clothes as a woman has on the back of her waist.—Greenwood Lake.

Freedom is a good thing, but let us not make too much of it. In Pennsylvania, for instance, a man is free to destroy his mother-in-law, but no man ever does.—Bishop Malalieu.

COURTING A VOICE

Telephone Girl Pursued by Lover Who Finally Married Her

A romantic story of the courtship and marriage of a telephone girl comes from St. Louis, where Mr. William McCalpin married Miss Viola Korthamp, a young lady employed at the St. Louis telephone exchange. The marriage was the result of a courtship induced by the sweet voice of Miss Viola.

Mr. McCalpin, who is one of the managers of the Waters Pierce Oil Company, a subsidiary of the Standard Oil Trust, whilst telephoning from his office was fascinated by the voice that answered his call, and after several unnecessary calls, for the purpose of listening to the enchanting voice, he introduced himself and asked to be allowed to visit her and "get acquainted." Miss Korthamp was taken aback by such "rapid" methods, and invariably "rung off" when her admirer persisted, and at length, to escape the chaff of her fellow operators, she obtained her transference to another exchange. Not to be beaten, her admirer set himself to hunt her down, and after a lapse of over two years he was successful.

Calling up a client on the telephone, he heard the long-sought voice from the exchange. He did not waste any time, for in response to the request, "Number, please," he said, "I am William McCalpin. Don't move. I am coming out to get you, and I am coming right away." The sweet, but astonished voice asked for enlightenment, and Mr. McCalpin repeated his former proposal. Persistence of this sort was bound to impress the lady, and after a moment's consideration the voice gave her name and address and permission for her admirer to call upon her father for an orthodox introduction.

Mr. McCalpin immediately went to see the father, who was the chief of the fire brigade of University City, and he consented to introduce Mr. McCalpin, with the happiest results. The "Voice" was quite up to expectations, and the oil man gave an equally good impression. He insisted upon immediate marriage, as he declared that he had been courting her for two years, and again his persistence won, and the young couple were married. Mr. McCalpin is no "millionaire, but as he is connected with the famous "octopus" it will probably not be long before he becomes one.

Removing a Landmark

Another picturesque part of Paris, the most picturesque perhaps of any, is to disappear. It is a portion of the little country village which has lived on unchanged for centuries upon the very summit of Montmartre. One of the quaintest houses to be pulled down is an old inn. It must be quite 300 years old.

The Recession is Over

We are not violating any confidence in making public the fact that during the past two market days the "INSIDERS" have been buying large blocks of stock in at least three of the Porcupine Issues. For this reason we say THE RECESSION IS AT AN END.

Another market feature to conjure over is the fact that recently a day another best important and rich finds are being made in the already proven zone in Tisdale. Already proven veins on the big Dome have been traced clear across the West Dome Property and into the Apex. Drilling and shaft sinking on this big vein is now going on in both the West Dome and Apex properties.

An important statement of underground conditions at the Hollinger Mine was made by an engineer of world-wide reputation immediately after an examination made on Thursday last, as follows:—

"Hollinger is one of the world's gold mines, and is being handled as splendidly from a mining standpoint as any mine I have ever examined."

The discovery of an exceedingly rich vein 2 inches wide, almost solid gold, was made by surveyors last week at the north-west corner of the Dome. The fact that this strike was made within a short distance of the DOME EXTENSION MINES is considered important by mining men who have examined it.

In less than 24 hours after a sensational lead was opened up on the North Dome property last week, the vein widened out to 24 inches, and the ore is exceptionally rich, assaying about $2,000 to the ton.

This exclusive information was received by us from OUR MAN ON THE SPOT, and can be depended upon by investors. The general undertone of the market is good, and in spite of heavy liquidation in certain Porcupine stocks the prices went up. We firmly believe THIS IS BUYING TIME, and purchases made at the low levels now prevailing in the market will show a substantial profit within a comparatively short time. We especially advise the immediate purchase of

We are not violating any confidence in making public the fact that during the past two market days the "INSIDERS" have been buying large blocks of stock in at least three of the Porcupine issues. For this reason we say THE RECESSION IS AT AN END.

Another market feature to conjure over is the fact that heavily a day pumps but important and rich finds are being made in the already proven zone in Tisdale. Already proven veins on the big Dome have been traced clear across the West Dome Property and into the Apex. Drifting and shaft sinking on this big vein is now going on at both the West Dome and Apex properties.

An important statement of underground conditions at the Hollinger Mine was made by an engineer of world-wide reputation immediately after an examination made on Thursday last, as follows:—

"Hollinger is one of the world's gold mines, and is being handled as splendidly from a mining standpoint as any mine I have ever examined."

The discovery of an exceedingly rich vein 2 inches wide, almost solid gold, was made by surveyors last week at the north-west corner of the Dome. The fact that this strike was made within a short distance of the DOME EXTENSION MINES is considered important by mining men who have examined it.

In less than 24 hours after a sensational find was opened up on the North Dome property last week, the vein widened out to 24 inches, and the ore is exceptionally rich, assaying about $2,400 to the ton.

This exclusive information was received by us from OUR MAN ON THE SPOT, and can be depended upon by investors. The general undertone of the market is good, and in spite of heavy liquidation in certain Porcupine stocks the prices went up. We firmly believe THIS IS BUYING TIME, and purchases made at the low levels now prevailing in the market will show a substantial profit within a comparatively short time. We especially advise the immediate purchase of

HOLLINGER	PEARL LAKE
PRESTON EAST DOME	VIPOND
SWASTIKA	WEST DOME

DOME EXTENSION	REA MINES
JUPITER	M'KINLEY-DARRAGH

Our Special Weekly Market Letter includes a careful physical analysis of the above properties. Our advices are absolutely unbiassed and are based on facts. Sent free on request.

WE WILL BE GLAD TO EXECUTE ORDERS FOR THE PURCHASE OR SALE OF ACTIVE, LISTED MINING STOCKS, EITHER FOR CASH OR ON MARGIN OF 33 1-3 PER CENT., AND WILL ACCEPT CERTIFICATES, WHEN PROPERLY ENDORSED, AS COLLATERAL MARGIN AGAINST PURCHASES.

The YOUNG FELLOWS' BARBER

Gentlemen—At 144 Simcoe St., rear of Payne's Drug Store, you will find one of the most up-to-date and best-run tonsorial parlours in the city. The new proprietor, Mr. Percy Lynch, has had wide experience in some of the best shops on this and the other side, besides a local reputation as a high class workman. The famous Stark system of Face Massage and Shampoo is something new in Peterborough and is used exclusively. One trial will convince you that up-to-date methods bring you greater results for your money than the old-time way. Young fellows want to look just right, and one call will bring you back again, as the service is without equal in the city. A high class barber is employed and Mr. Lynch guarantees everyone prompt attention and careful work, regardless of time or numbers. One trial is solicited, the work will do the rest.

RALEIGH'S WIFE.

Interesting Letter Bespeaks His Love For His Spouse.

The long and interesting letter written while in prison by Sir Walter Raleigh, which was sold at Sotheby's in London, a few days ago for $2,200, is dated Oct. 5, no year; and is addressed "To my very worthy friend, Sir Walter Cope, Knight." It is as follows:

"Sir Walter Cope: You are of my old acquayntances, and were my familiar friend for many yeare, in which time I hope you cannot say that I ever used any unkind office towards you. But our fortunes are now changed and it may be in your power greatly to bynde me unto you, if the bynding of a man to my estate be worth anything.

"My desire unto you is that you wilbe pleased to move my Lord Treasurer in my behalf that, by his grace, my wife might agayne be made a prisoner with me as she hath bine years last past, shee being now devided from me and thereby to my great impoverishing, I am driven to keip to howses. A miserable sute it is, and yet great to me, who, in this wretched estate, can hope for no other thing than peacible sorrow.

"It is now that I call the Lord of alk power to wittnes, yet I ever have bine and am resolved that it was never in the worthy hart of Sr. Robert Cecyll (what soever a counselor of State and a Lord Treasurer of Inglound must do) to suffer me to fall, much less to perrish. For whatsoever names it hath pleased his Lordship to use towards me, which might utterly dispaire any bodie else, yet I know yt he spake then as a counselor, sitting in counsell in company of such as would not otherwise have bine satisfied.

"But, as God liveth, I would have bought his presence att a far dearer rate than these sharp words and those three months' close imprisonment, for it is in his Lordship's hart and countenance that I behold all yt remaynes to me of comfort and all the hope I have, and from which I shall never be beaten till I see the last of evills and the disapire, which haht no healp. The blessings of God cannot make him cruel that was never so * * * nor any man of so great worth to delight in the endless adversities of an enemie, with lash of him who, in his very sowle and nature, can never be such a one towards him.

"Sr, the matter is of no great importance (though a cruell destinie hath made it so to me) to desire that my wife may live with me in this unsavoury place. If, by your mediation, I may obtayne it I will acknowledge it in highest degree of thankfulness and rest reddy to trew fayth to be commanded by you.

"W. Ralegh."

The letter was probably written in 1610, when for three months the enemies of Raleigh, or Ralegh, as he spelled the name, succeeded in depriving him of the society of his wife, who was ordered to leave the Tower. He was released in 1615-16 to go on a hunt for gold in South America, but failing in his quest was re-arrested on his return to England and was executed on Oct. 29, 1618.

LOT OF WORRIES.

Bishop of Manchester Says That Is Secret of Happiness.

Speaking of the removal of Dr. Talbot to Winchester at a meeting at Church House, Westminster, the other day, the Bishop of Manchester told an amusing story of his own departure from a small parish to a larger one in earlier years. When he told his parishioners that he was going to have seven curates they said, "That's worse than having seven wives."

His answer was, "It all depends upon the wives. It all depends upon the curates." Besides, Dr. Knox added, his little experience of life was this—that the secret of happiness was to have a sufficient multitude of worries. The man who had only one worry, a blind that would not be pulled up straight by the servant, or a coal-scuttle the bottom of which was always coming out—that man found his way to the lunatic asylum. But the man who had no time to dwell upon his worries because he had to go from one to another and back again, and round and round like a squirrel in a cage, could be a perfectly happy man.

Dr. Knox is in many respects one of the most democratic bishops in the church. His services on the sands at Blackpool in the summer, and his "straight from the shoulder" talks to thousands of Lancashire mill hands that make holiday there, have become institutions.

Preaching on one occasion on charity, Dr. Knox, dealing with the various types of wastrels that parade up and down the country, related a story of a particularly proud and haughty member of the fraternity. An old lady, being accosted by him, gave him a threepenny piece. The beggar, holding the coin in the palm of his hand, gazed at it for some seconds: "Wot d'ye think I'm going to do with this?" he growled. "Oh, keep it," said the old lady sweetly; "keep it, and give it to some poor tramp."

THE AGE OF YOUTH.

New Governor General of Australia Is Only 37 Years Old.

Where a few years ago the young men were considered to be too hot-headed and inexperienced to be entrusted with the reins of government, they have gradually forged to the front until now they are displacing the gray-beards in positions that call for the highest qualifications to which men can attain.

A striking example of this is evidenced in the fact that the British Cabinet is the youngest that has ever been in office, and it has appointed the youngest governor-general of Australia—Lord Denman, who will succeed Lord Dudley when he retires this year.

Lord Denman will be 37 years this year, and already he has seen and done a lot. Quite early in life he made up his mind to be a soldier, and his opportunity came sooner than it does for most men, for not long after he left the military college at Sandhurst the South African war broke out, and he served as captain of the Middlesex Squadron of the Imperial Yeomanry and saw much service, and finally being invalided home after a wound received during a skirmish. He was immensely popular with his soldiers and noted for the attention he paid to their comfort.

Besides being a keen soldier, Lord Denman is a man of strong political opinions, and as he has great ambitions he is likely to be heard more of later on. He is a Liberal, and when that party came into power received his first appointment as lord-in-waiting to the late King. He has also acted as deputy speaker and whip in the House of Lords. His last appointment was that of captain of the Corps of Gentlemen-at-Arms, the famous royal bodyguard which celebrated its 400th anniversary last year.

Collects Horseshoes.

A unique sight is to be seen at Upper Studley, near Trowbridge, where Mr. James Jennings, the well-known steam-roundabouts proprietor, has a huge stack of old horse-shoes which he has collected during the past two years. It stands 17 feet high, is 10 feet through, weighs about 150 tons, and could not be purchased for $2,000. The shoe stack attracts great attention, particularly from touring motorists, who frequently stop to examine the curious pile.

Blessing the Crops.

The quaint and picturesque ceremony of blessing the crops was observed recently on the Earl of Craven's estate at Binley, in Northeast Warwickshire. Meeting at the parish church, the vicar, Rev. Lewes Richardson, and a number of parishioners formed into procession, and various well-known farms were visited. At several points in the parish a halt was called, and an abbreviated form of service gone through.

BASEBALL STRATEGY.

Bench Orders at Times Gesture the Batter With the Fans.

One of the charms of the game is its unexpectedness, the fact that you never can tell what's going to happen until it is history.

Do you know what "inside ball" really is? Most "fans" think they do, but few really do know. In fact, it is a very interesting sidelight, both on the game and on the American character, to realize that nine out of ten people who see a ball game see only the flesh of it, never realize the skeleton on which it is built, never see the heart beating nor watch its lifeblood flow. You go to a game and shout yourself hoarse.

"Hit it out, you, you 'bonehead!' What yer standing there for? Think this a pink tea? They're all perfectly good—hit 'em!" And the player at the plate, hearing, longs to obey—for all players love to hit—yet holds himself in.

"Make him give you three balls. Then hit!" are his orders from the bench from the baseball general ordering the game. A man is on third. There is but one out. Hits have been few and far between, but a long fly will score the man. How get a long fly? By meeting one which "cuts the heart of the plate" square and fair. How get the pitcher to serve such a ball? By "working" him until three balls have been called, when the fourth ball must come over the plate or the batter be given a pass; hence the orders. If they go wrong, if the pitcher succeeds in getting three strikes across before three balls, the batter strikes out, and a groan goes up from the crowd. But the batter knows, and the pitcher knows, and the team knows, and the players on the bench know that the man at the plate struck out because he was obeying orders.—World Today.

TOLD IN FEW WORDS.

Shortest Robber Story in History, as Narrated by Voltaire.

In his study of "Seven Great Statesmen" Andrew D. White describes the work done in the eighteenth century by the French minister Turget against the vicious system then prevailing of "farming out" the taxes. A great combination of contractors resulted, who grew enormously rich at the people's expense, not, however, without able criticism.

This syndicate assumed the character of what in America of these days would be called a "combine," and at the head of it were the farmers general, wealthy, powerful and, as a rule, merciless. Their power pervaded the entire nation, from the king's apartments at Versailles to the cottages of the lowliest village.

To these men and their methods Voltaire had made a reference which ran through France and indeed through Europe.

A party of Parisians were amusing each other by telling robber stories.

Presently Voltaire, who had been listening quietly, said:

"I can tell a robber story better than any of yours."

The whole room immediately became silent and listened to the greatest personage in the French literature of the eighteenth century.

Voltaire after clearing his throat began as follows:

"Once on a time there was a farmer general."

Then he was silent. Presently all began to cry out:

"Why do you stop? Go on. Tell us the story."

"I have told the story," said Voltaire. "Do you not see that my statement implies the greatest robber story in history?"

BEATTIE TAKES ACTUAL PART IN DIRECTING THE DEFENCE OPERATIONS

Prisoner in Famous Trial Hopes to Break Down the Evidence Which Was Responsible for Putting Him on Trial.

COUSIN A WITNESS

Special to The Examiner:

CHESTERFIELD COURT HOUSE, VA., AUG. 26.—With Paul Beattie, the star witness for the State's attorneys, who are fighting to send Henry Clay Beattie, jr., to the electric chair, scheduled to take the stand, the calm-eyed prisoner to-day took charge of his own defence.

Seemingly confident that by directing the energies of lawyers Harry M. Smith, and Hill Carter, he can improve the chances in his fight for life, the man accused of murdering his young wife assumed personal control of the details of the case. He relied on the lawyers, two of Virginia's most brilliant legal lights, for legal points. But they settled no question of importance, without referring to him, and when his opinions clashed with theirs, his prevailed. For they argued that it is his life that is at stake and he should be satisfied with the way things are done.

With a block of foolscap before him he sat between Smith and his aged care-worn father, making brief notes of the testimony and suggesting questions for cross-examination of the State's witnesses.

His Power Over Cousin.

Confident of his power over the weakling cousin, whose confession that he bought the gun with which Mrs. Beattie was killed, placed Henry on trial for his life, Beattie planned to concentrate the attack of his lawyers on Paul. His story is the keystone of the arch that bears up the State's case, and if it can be broken in the least degree, the chances for demolishing the entire structure will be good. With this in mind, the defence planned a tremendous assault on the thin, yellow-faced, vacillating cousin.

Proceedings were delayed by Paul's late arrival. The auto in which he was conveyed broke down and he did not arrive until after the regular hour of convening of court.

The Defence Overruled.

Judge Watson to-day overruled the defence on an important point regarding the indictment. Attorney Smith held that all evidence as to the wound that killed Mrs. Beattie, extending back into the head, was admissible, because the indictment declares that a wound "in the face" caused her death.

When court convened, Counsel Smith for the defence made another legal objection. He moved to exclude all testimony relating to the letter written by Beattie to Beulah Binford, because Beattie's admission at the coroner's inquest that he had written the letter was privileged by law, and could not be used against him. He argued that Beattie was legally under examination at that time, although he volunteered the admission. Judge Watson declined to strike out the testimony.

Wendenburg declared that the State would show that Beattie volunteered the testimony to prevent Beulah Binford evading the question to shield him.

Exceptions were noted in both rulings.

Despite these set-backs, Beattie smiled and chatted earnestly with Smith, keping his pencil busy jotting down notes. The jury was brought in and George Jarrell, a Chesterfield County deputy and policeman, who assisted Coroner Loving in the inquest, was called as the first witness of the day.

ENGLISH JOURNAL SCORES THE CONSERVATIVE PARTY

LONDON, AUG. 25.—The Manchester Guardian says anent the election cry in Canada that reciprocity will lead to absorption by the United States, that it seems to be more vigorously used in England than in Canada. If that argument, it says, is thought by the Canadian farmer to be worthless, then there is no other one that will have weight with him against the offer of the new and enormously important market near his doors.

The curious feature of the elections, it continues, is that Bourassa's allies are Conservatives, whose complaint is precisely that Laurier is half-hearted in his Imperialism and unpatriotic enough to decline to put the Canadian squadron wholly at the disposal of the British Admiralty.

The Observer says, the significant fact remains that reciprocity can only be defeated, if at all, by allies frankly anti-Imperialistic.

GREAT PROGRAMME FOR THE LABOUR DAY SPORTS

The programme of the Labour Day sports are out and judging from the variety of events along with the handsome prizes offered there is bound to be a large entry list.

The following events are on the programme: Running high jump, running broad jump, 12-lb. shot put, pole vault, 100 yard dash, one mile run, one-quarter mile run, 5 mile road race, base running contest, and other events open to union men. This programme, to say nothing of the ball game, Belleville vs. Peterborough, Quoit Tournament and Tug-of-War contests is sure to furnish some good sport.

The five-mile race will draw a good crowd of starters, as several of the best men in this part of the country have given the committee their word that they will be on the starting line when the gun goes off.

Bill Shaw and Mike O'Brien will show the railroad men something in the base-running line, both these men can travel the circuit in pretty fast time.

CROSSING FATALITY

Special to The Examiner:

GRIMSBY, AUG. 25.—Mr. Nathan Overholt, a respected citizen of Waterford, lost his life by being struck by a westbound express at the G. T. R. crossing at Grimsby Beach at 10.45 this morning. The deceased had just arrived from Waterford, and left he wife at Mr. Frank Russe's store, while he went to look up a boarding house, where he and his wife could stay a couple of weeks in this district. He had made arrangements for board and rooms at Mr. Jacob Walters' and was returning to get his wife and grips when the accident happened. As he reached the tracks a freight train going east on the right-hand track was passing, and he stood on the west-bound track watching it pass. Number 9, one of the G. T. R.'s fastest trains, was running twenty minutes late, and reached this crossing as the freight was going east. The engineer saw Mr. Overholt on the track, and whistled almost continuously for him to get out of the way, but he apparently did not hear the train, and before the engineer could stop it he was struck and thrown about one hundred feet upon the station platform. The train was stopped within a length of itself. The head and left side were crushed in; his left arm was broken and his left leg broken in two places. This crossing is one of the most dangerous on the whole of the G. T. R. line, on account of the heavy traffic over it from the trolley cars to the Beach picnic grounds and park.

Dr. Alexander, Coroner, was called, and he ordered an inquest. Constable Bowslaugh immediately empanelled a jury and they viewed the remains and the spot of the accident. The body was turned over to J. C. Marlatt & Sons for preparation for burial. The jury will meet at 8.30 on September 2. The deceased had only been a resident of Waterford for a short time. He leaves no children.

There will be a big rally in Mr. Stratton's committee rooms, George street, to-night, at 8 o'clock. A cordial invitation is extended to all Mr. Stratton's supporters and all believers in reciprocity, to be present and take part in this gathering.

A STRANGE DECLARATION

Special to The Examiner:

TORONTO, AUG. 26.—Registers of Toronto have received a peculiar document, accompanied by necessary registry fees and instructions to duly register. It is a sworn declaration by H. L. Burnett and John Taylor, two Dowieites in the city of Zion, Ill., to the effect that they both had visions and that Jesus Christ will surely return to the earth before the close of the year 1912, appearing first to the High Priest and twelve apostles, possibly in some city or town in Canada.

BOYS DAMAGE NEW GRAND STAND

Following the case of the destructiveness of boys, by which the reconstruction of the Central School has been delayed and damaged, a new building in another portion of the city has just received similar attention.

The new grandstand on the Exhibition Grounds was entered by a number of boys, who did wilful damage to the structure.

The matter has been handed over to the police, who intend puting a stop to such practices.

WOOD A LIKELY WINNER

KILLED IN RUNAWAY

Special to The Examiner.

SMITH'S FALLS, ONT., AUG. 23.—Samuel Mossup, a young English farm labourer, was killed last evening in a runaway, when a load of hay passed over his stomach.

As Hon. George P. Graham put it at Brockville; "Did you ever hear of the removal of taxation on food increasing the cost of living?"

The Open Air Men For Stratton

Some men are too lazy to take an interest in out-door sports, and some are too busy. We will take the lazy men no further than this sentence, because the busy men are better "copy."

In fact this little statement by a friend is all about a busy man of affairs, too busy to take an active part in these pleasant pastimes, but not too busy to cast a wistful look every once in a while at the fellows who are having such a fine time in the open air, and to put his hand in his pocket for many prizes and trophies to help the good cause along.

Like every big man, he has a good deal of the boy in him, wholesome impulses that have not grown old, fresh enthusiasms that have not faded, a capacity for innocent enjoyment that no amount of business cares can overlay. He is a little like Peter Pan. In some things he has never grown up—he likes to see boys and young men, and older ones, too, having a good time and building up their bodies with healthy exercise. In this respect he feels very much as he did when he was a little bare-footed boy out Ashburnham way, when he used to spend whole afternoons in the swimming hole, and run and jump, and soak up all the sunshine and fresh air he could accommodate.

No doubt it was his joy of youth that has kept him young ever since. He is fifty-three years young at this writing, and looks ten years younger. It has been years since he had the chance to indulge his taste for sports. He has always had to take his fun on the run, so to speak. His has been a crowded life. Ambition and business, and the suffrages of his fellow men have put many burdens on his shoulders, but that did not prevent him from being in spirit with the cricketers the baseballers, the footballers, the golfers, the bowlers, the rowers, the runners, the hockey players, the lacrosse players, and all the rest of the manly tribe who on land or ice or water, were training their muscles and finding vent for the physical exuberance he was obliged to use in other ways.

A WISE POLICY

There was, as it turns out, a good deal of common sense at the back of his boyish enthusiasm for sports, because after all it is good policy to train up citizens sound in wind and stout in heart and courage, for the sound mind in the sound body is a combination that spells success. It greatly helps clear thinking to keep the liver working. These are strenuous days, when the race goes more than ever to the strong, and one way to be strong is to take exercise, and live cleanly.

So this good citizen by a natural instinct for encouraging manly sports, has been doing it as much for the benefit of Canadian nationhood as if he had sat down and thought it out as an elaborate policy.

By this time everybody has guessed the name. Yes, it is Hon. J. R. Stratton. Under his rule The Examiner has always been a powerful influence in amateur athletics. At this moment there are in The Examiner Office three secretaries of amateur athletic organizations in Peterboro, and Mr. Glover, the Business Manager, is well known as a formerly famous hockey player.

Mr. Stratton's gifts have always been given to amateur sports, because he believes in sport for the sport's sake and for the strength the players get out of it for their bodies. His object has been to make sport more general and the County of Peterboro that much happier. There is no amateur sport in the county that hasn't at one time or another experienced his sympathy, encouragement and substantial support.

His gifts have been so many that he couldn't remember them if you asked. Some of the more recent will readily come to mind.

THE ROAD RACE AND OTHER SPORTS

The Annual Examiner Road Race is a popular institution. This race in cups and prizes costs $150 to put on. It is really two races—a Junior race open to boys under 17, and a Senior race, open to those over that age. The Senior race usually attracts about fifteen, and the Junior race from twenty-five to thirty competitors. This is as Mr. Stratton would have it, for boys are the rising hope. The ten mile journey is not long enough to develop heart strain and other evils attendant on greater distances, is just long enough to build up legs, and wind, and stamina, and put on endurance. It has already produced one Marathoner, Fred Simpson, who has since turned professional and distinguished himself in England, Canada and the United States.

The Peterboro Bowling Club contends this year for a beautiful cup given by Hon. Mr. Stratton. Bowling is a game for all ages but particularly for grown men of comfortable avoirdupois, who find in it not too violent exercise, reasonable excitement and jolly companionship on the green sward under the blue sky. It is a game, moreover, for Generals, Admirals and Statesmen. Everybody has seen the picture of Sir Francis Drake refusing to defeat the Spanish Armada until he had finished his game of bowls.

For the last four or five years the City League Hockey Trophy has been presented by Hon. J. R. Stratton. Hockey is Canada's national winter sport, as lacrosse is in summer. It is a game of fleetness, sureness, and calls enough on the player's good temper to build up that highly desirable virtue. Peterboro is very proud of its hockey team, and nobody in Peterboro prouder than Hon. J. R. Stratton.

Mr. Stratton's cup is a coveted trophy at the Stoney Lake regatta. Peterboro County will send out a Hanlan some day. Already it has sent out Blomfield of Lakefield, the champion canoe expert of the world.

One of the matches of the Havelock Rifle Association meetings is a competition for the Stratton Cup. Good shooting means a clear eye, a steady hand and an accurate balance of judgment. These are qualities worth encouraging. They are as acceptable in business as they are in the defence of one's country.

Golf has not been overlooked. The Golf and Country Club Cup is not the least of Mr. Stratton's contributions to amateur sport. Golf will soon be as much a habit with Canada as it is with Scotland.

In the earlier days when lacrosse was a more national game than, alas, it is now, Mr. Stratton was an enthusiastic lacrosse player, and could handle the stick with the best of them. The play was a good deal rougher then. It had not been toned down by the disciplining powers the rules give the referee to-day. The games were for blood, and the young lacrosse player learned to give and take shrewd knocks with an equal spirit. "That training I got in lacrosse," says Mr. Stratton "taught me a thing or two that were useful afterwards. I have never found anything since that could hurt quite as hard as the clouts I got over the head in lacrosse. It was a good school. I want to see lacrosse booming again."

Mr. Stratton has always enjoyed a cricket match and can talk the patter of cuts and slicers and hits to leg like an expert. But his brother, the late W. A. Stratton, was the cricketer of the family.

He has also taken a keen interest in curling and has assisted in keeping up the sport by taking his share of stock in the Curling Rink Company.

Mr. Stratton gets most of his out-door sport from horses. He has a stable full of prize winners. He has a thoroughly British love of fine horses, and although he runs an automobile, he is a horse lover yet. When he steps into his trap he takes the lines from the driver and does the driving himself. He likes to feel the pull of the strong, spirited animal in the shafts. There's a thrill in a real live horse that you cannot get out of an automobile—a thrill of mastership.

All of which goes to show why Hon. J. R. Stratton is a "good sport" now, and has been ever since people can remember. The open-air men line up for Hon. J. R. Stratton because he is a good citizen, a good fellow and a good sport.

ELEVEN BODIES ARE STILL UNIDENTIFIED

Special Wire to The Examiner.

MANCHESTER, N.Y., AUG. 26.—Eleven of the thirty-two bodies of yesterday's wreck, still lay in Shortsville morgue unidentified. They are thought to be all Eastern Pennsylvania people. It is now thought sure that the wreck was caused by a broken rail. Three of the fourteen coaches leaving the track during the rain and plunging over the trestle. Sixteen undertakers worked all night gathering the mangled remains together.

PARIS, FRANCE, AUG. 26.—Andre Jagerschmidt, who passed through Canada last week in an attempt to get around the world in forty days, landed just after nine this morning in an automobile in front of his office in the Daily Excelsior building, thus completing his circuit of the globe in 39 days, nineteen hours and forty minutes, breaking all previous records which was 64 days, made by another Paris newspaperman.

PORT LEMON, COSTA RICA, AUG. 26.—Two officers, three soldiers and ten civilians were blown to atoms in a powder magazine here last night when a soldier lit a fire to melt lead to make images of saints.

GOOD POSITIONS

The Peterborough Business College is a worthy link in a chain of Seven Business Colleges, located in the cities of London, Peterborough, Welland, and the towns of Orangeville, Walkerton, Wingham, and Clinton. Owing to its high-grade work it is affiliated with the Commercial Educators' Association of Canada. It is freely admitted that owing to these connections, its students get the very best positions. Fall openings are on Aug. 28th, and Sept. 5th, but at this school each student is instructed privately at his or her own desk; students may enter any day. Many students study all at home, and others partly at home and finish at the College. As Spotton Colleges are the largest trainers in Canada, and have thirty years' experience, it would be well for young people to get their training there. Last year Mr. Spotton trained over 1,200 young people and placed them in good positions. What he has done for thousands of others he can do for you.

LIBERAL MASS MEETING.

Liberals and the electors generally, are reminded of the mass meeting, to be held in the Grand Opera House on Thursday night, in the interests of Mr. Stratton's candidature. It will be in their own interests, for the chief speaker, apart from the candidate, will be Hon. George P. Graham, Minister of Railways and Canals, who is noted as one of the brightest, keenest, most incisive, most instructive, platform speakers in Canada to-day.

WHAT IS THE COST?

The answer to this question is that the cost of a Canadian Government Annuity depends upon four things: First, the age of the applicant; 2nd. the amount of annuity required: third, the age at which the Annuity is to commence; and, fourth, the plan on which the purchase is made. Tables which answer these questions have been published by the Department and may be had on application. Annuities are payable for life, but for a small additional payment may be guaranteed for a number of years certain, not exceeding twenty, so that should death occur before the guaranteed period expires the Annuity would be continued for the remainder of the twenty years to the Annuitants' legal representatives. By the latter plan the return of a specific sum is assured.

Mr. Burnham's utopian schema of old age pensions for which he airily advocates the setting aside of a "few millions," tends to create paupers, and support them at the expense of hardworking people. By the government scheme of annuities, the beneficiary is taught thrift and self-reliance and the annuitant is protected by his own independent action from a destitute old age. Which is the better?

(The word utopian is used advisedly. The imperial dictionary defines an "utopian" as an ardent, but impracticable reformer," a dreamer of dreams).

WHEAT AND WHEAT PRODUCTION.

An interesting bulletin has been issued from the Dominion Department of Agriculture, Ottawa, regarding wheat production. According to Beerbohm the total estimate of the world's wheat crop of wheat for 1911 amounts to, in round figures, 1,640 million bushels. The bulletin also shows the wheat production of Canada and the United States, for twenty years—1891 to 1911, inclusive. The estimated Canadian wheat crop is put for 1911 (Beerbohn) at 184 million bushels; that of the United States 664 million bushels.

In 20 years the wheat of the United States has almost doubled—since 1891, when it was 383 millions, while the wheat crop of Canada has increased nearly six fold in thirty years. This year's estimated crop is more than double that of ten years ago, while that of the United States for 1911, is 84 millions less than it was in 1901. This shows that Canada's wheat product is steadily growing, that of 1911 (estimated) being the largest in its history, while that of the United States is only 58 millions greater than it was twenty years ago, while this year's crop (estimated, of Canadian wheat, is four times as great as it was twenty years ago. Canada's whet crop this year is the largest in the past thirty years. This is further evidence that the grain and soil crop production of the United States is decreasing, while those of Canada is growing in far greater ratio. With reciprocity opening the gates of a country with a rapidly-decreasing crop production there would be a constantly improving market for Canadian farm products, which are not only rapidly growing in revenue, but could be greatly increased, if a convenient and good market were assured.

A BEAUTIFUL TANGLE.

Sir Charles Tupper, who is quite old enough to know better, has written to a Canadian, in opposition to reciprocity.

Sir Charles Tupper has had a change of heart. He tried, as Sir John Macdonald and all the great Conservative leaders since Confederation, to get reciprocity with the United States, and he was so anxious that he was willind, not only to give Uncle Sam free access of farm products to the United States market, but to throw in—throw open—our Canadian fisheries as a make-weight.

The degenerate Conservatives of these latter days, are going back on Sir Charles Tupper, as Sir Charles is going back on himself and Sir John Macdonald, and Sir John Thompson on the reciprocity question.

Sir Charles Tupper is welcomed as a new ally of the Conservatives.

Sir Charles Tupper not only endorsed the Conservative allies, elsewhere in Canada, but he is in the running as a co-worker with Mr. Bourassa, the Quebec lieutenant, for election purposes, of Mr. Borden. Mr. Bourassa is endorsing and helping elect Conservative candidates in Quebec.

Sir Charles in 1900 boasted that he had been instrumental in breaking up the "Imperial Federation League," which stood for Canadian contribution to the British army.

Sir Charles then opposed the principle of Mr. Borden's naval policy, which is contribution of Canadian money to build British Dreadnoughts.

Sir Charles about the same time took the stand that Mr. Bourassa ten years later is taking. In 1900 Sir Charles said:

"As far as Sir Wilfrid Laurier is concerned, you can say that he is TOO ENGLISH for me with his programme of Imperial Federation." Hasn't that the real Bourassa ring? Mr. Bourassa is now using the same argument in Mr. Borden's interests—but, strictly for home consumption in Quebec.

Mr. Borden is using the opposite in Ontario in his own interests—"Laurier is not British enough."

Isn't this a beautiful mix-up? Sir Charles joining in the anti-Laurier, anti-British cry of Bourassa, who is not opposed to reciprocity and combatting Mr. Borden's race and creed cry in Ontario, and still joining hands with Mr. Borden in opposing reciprocity.

We Liberals will welcome Sir Charles with open arms, if he will only join with Mr. Borden in predicting a sweeping Conservative victory in the present elections.

Similar predictions by Sir Charles Tupper and Mr. Borden have been followed by sweeping Liberal victories.

THE HORSE QUESTION.

The opponents of reciprocity base their arguments chiefly on assertion, and when they do undertake to quote figures they present them in so grotesquely distorted and misleading a manner as to destroy their reliability. Now, glittering generalities, such as Mr. Borden employs, as the stock of his speeches are not always to be accepted as the last word. Concrete facts are needed. We find flaunting statements, such as "Farmers will lose $50.00 on every horse, through reciprocity"—a bald and unmeaning statement, standing by itself.

It is asserted, in respect of horses, as of other articles, that horses are higher in Canada than in the United States. If that were a fact it would mean no injury to the Canadian farmer. He is not compelled to send his horses to the United States simply because the duty is removed. He still has the home market. But as markets fluctuate according to local conditions, reciprocity places the farmer in a position to take the advantage.

But horses are not higher in price in Canada. The reader is referred to an article on this page, giving the opinion and experience of one of the best and most reliable horse breders and dealers in Canada. Take for comparison Toronto and Buffalo, and also take Canada "blocks," from 1,300 to 1,500. They sell for $400 to $550 per team, in Toronto, and in Buffalo they bring $700 or $800 per pair. Take also our drivers, our "misfits" that hardly bring $100 or $150 in Toronto, and which dealers say sometimes "eat their heads off" before they are sold—delivery and milk wagon, and light express horses. The United States have many cities that demand this class of horses, where they will bring, as they have brought in Buffalo, $250 to $350.

Take, also, our heavy draft horses —1,600 to 1,800 lbs.. In our only considerable home markets, Hamilton, Toronto, Ottawa, Montreal, they sell for $250 to $360. The same horses would bring from $500 to $600 in the Buffalo market and there are scores of other cities in the United States that want such horses and will pay similar prices for them.

We cannot expect to sell in the British market—the home of the horse. The horseman referred to says there is no market there for Canadian horses; that is, no paying market.

The market of the Canadian Northwest has been, and is still, a good market for Ontario's best mares and stallions. But, with the growing use of steam plows and the growing breeding of the kind of horses the West needs, the demand for Ontario horses will fall off. There will be no market then for even our good, substantial Ontario horses, not to speak of the light, loose-built "plugs" that prevail in the Valley of the Missouri, which the opponents of reciprocity say will flood the West.

If increased home breeding will shut off the market for Ontario horses what will be the fate of the poor, light, no-account horses of the United States West. One might as well ship ice to the North Pole.

If the farmers reject reciprocity they will soon find out their mistake. They will soon find the Northwest market self-supplying in the matter of horses, the few large Canadian cities unable to buy our best horses, and the United States market, which is unlimited, so far as our Ontario supply is concerned, closed by a hostile tariff, big enough to eat up the profit. The farmers of Ontario will find themselves as hard up for a horse market as Richard III. was for a horse.

Reciprocity will open a big and profitable market for our horses and live stock generally, and, in fact, all our natural products. The home market is a good market, but with generally lower prices than across the border, and while our supply of farm products is rapidly increasing, the home demand is not increasing in proportion. As the market for Ontario horses in the West is disappearing through home-breeding, so will the growth of production in Ontario and Canada at large, surpass to a greater extent than it does now the home demand, with, of course, a downward tendency of prices.

But farmers can do, and are doing, their own thinking, and will have as little use for politicians who "load them up wrong" as they have for the insulting statement that United States farmers can out-farm the Canadian farmer.

The politician that talks as if the farmer had no 'horse sense" in matters that concern him; that he knows about, makes a big mistake. The farmer, as well as the working man, can do his own thinking if they are not "steered" or "queered" by political sharpers.

A Horseman Who Knows Talks Horse In Relation To Reciprocity

Mr. A. Yeager, a veteran horse dealer, with an experience that qualifies him for knowing what he is talking about, writes as follows to the press:

I am very much surprised at Mr. Burns', Toronto, horse dealer, letter in The Globe. If he were a breeder he would be looking to the future market for horses as well as the present. He, of course, would like to compel the Ontario farmer to have just the one market so he can get his commission, and with what is paid for board besides he will get from twenty to fifty dollars from each horse. Of course he doesn't want reciprocity; why should he?

One of his alleged facts is that horses are higher in Canada than in the States. Take Toronto and Buffalo, for instance. He is quoting Canada horses; say, blocks that weigh from 1,300 to 1,500. They bring from $400 to $560 a pair in Toronto. Ship the same to Buffalo and they will sell quicker at $700 to $800 a pair. Then take our drivers, our misfits, that you can hardly get $100 or $150 for, and their board will eat them up before they are sold; the same will bring in Buffalo from $250 to $350; I mean delivery, grocery, milk waggon, light express, and livery horses. They have the cities, and they want our Canadian misfits; there are thousands looking for them.

Then take our draft horses that weigh from 1,600 to 1,800. In what native cities shall we sell them? Hamilton, Toronto, Montreal? They bring from $250 to $350. The same would bring from $500 to $600 in Buffalo.

Now we will take the American horse that Mr. Burns says is not bringing more than ours is here. They are not only stall-fed horses, but they are fattened on corn. By the time you get them muscled up and acclimated it takes from six to nine months. Is it any wonder they want our horses? He might just as well compare the Canadian lambs with the western sheep on the Buffalo market. There is just as much difference, and Canadian lambs are worth nearly double at Buffalo.

I have been a breeder all my life, and in 1896, 1897 and 1898 I bought and shipped over 1,100 horses to Montreal, which was our only market. Then they were reshipped to England, and the breeder was getting for 1,200-pound and 1,400-pound blocks sixty to eighty dollars apiece. The same kind will bring to-day $200 to $250 in the Toronto market, and considerably more in Buffalo. But ship them to Liverpool and the price is $150, which nets the breeder $80 or $90 by the time he pays his freight and commission, and we could not sell 100 horses in one hundred days at that price. In other words, that market is gone.

Now take our great northwest, that is buying our best mares and stallions. With their steam plows and binders and with the number of horses that they will raise in ten years and less they will not want our horses. Will Mr. Burns or any sane man tell us where we are going to sell our horses?

Mr. Burns says Mr. Yeager wants reciprocity so he can go to the States, buy horses, ship them in, fit them up and sell them. I can bond them in free of duty and ship them back in a year free of duty now, except a dollar per head. But we do not want their horses. Come to Simcoe and I can show you more good high-class horses in glorious Norfolk county than you can find in any three States in the Union. Would not the western States have a nice chance competing against the Ontario horse in the eastern States, with our horses acclimated and ready to go to work?

I will say that if the breeders of Ontario turn down reciprocity in less than five years they will say: "Where is our market for our fine 1,700-pound and 1,800-pound horses. Where is the market for blocks? Where are the cities to which we can sell our misfits? Where are the millionaires to purchase our hunters, carriage and saddle horses?" We have the goods and we need their money.

I would say in conclusion, to the farmers and breeders of all classes of horses: You are in the largest industry in the Province; you are manufacturing an article to be marketed five years hence; this is not a Grit and Tory affair; it is a serious question. Where is the manufacturer whose goods were to be sold five years in the future who would not look ahead, and try to secure for that time the largest possible markets? Eighty per cent. of the members of Parliament who are opposing reciprocity are manufacturers or speculators. But our English horse market is already a thing of the past: in five years the northwest will have its own sources of supply, while with reciprocal trade arrangements in force New York State alone will buy more horses in one year right from the present than we can sell to the northwest for the next five years.

Simcoe, Ont. A YEAGER.

Belinda's Orphan

She Brought Happiness to a Lonely Home

By CLARISSA MACKIE

Copyright by American Press Association, 1911.

"No, I don't want no orphan," said Miss Belinda, with a decisive shake of her head. "I've got my hands full now with chickens and young turkeys coming on and bees and currant bushes without bothering with a high flying youngster that'll scare the chicks and get stung by the bees, although they're warranted stingless, mind you, and to trample on my berry bushes. No, ma'am—no orphans for me!" This time Miss Belinda's lips clicked together with a little sound of finality.

"I'm sorry, Belinda, because the home is just about running over with 'em. I was telling the matron this morning that I knew there were plenty of folks in Little River who could give a good home to some of those youngsters if they wasn't so mean and stingy. Of course I don't mean you," added the local member of the visiting committee of the Riverview Orphans' home. "But sometimes when I think of all the spare beds, all made up clean and white, in the empty homes around here it makes my blood bile to look upon them poor orphans so crowded for room that Mrs. Hill says they'll have to sleep in rows crosswise of the beds pretty soon."

"I want to know!" ejaculated Belinda, with a startled glance at Emeline Brown. "I think you better stick to the truth, Emeline, and not exaggerate. Now, honest and true, how many orphans too many have they got up there?"

"Ten," replied Mrs. Brown flatly.

"Humph!" snorted Belinda.

In and out of the scarlet wool vest her big wooden knitting needles as she rapidly constructed a shawl to comfort some shivering shoulders when the summer was over. Mrs. Brown watched her neighbor expectantly. With a family of seven sons and daughters under her own rooftree she was safe in the condemnation of the uncrowded homes of Little River. Here was Belinda Downs, now a handsome, well preserved spinster of forty-two, of independent means, possessing a snug home, a tiny income sufficient for her modest wants, a little shaggy pony and a rusty phaeton to carry her about the countryside. There was neither man, woman nor child to call upon Belinda for service, for she was without relatives, having outlived them all.

"I should think this was just the place for an orphan to be happy in," suggested Mrs. Brown, throwing an admiring glance around the small domain where orchard and garden were green and thrifty in spring bloom.

"I've got orphans enough as it is," snapped Belinda shortly.

Mrs. Brown smiled as she saw the fatherless and motherless strays which the lonely woman had gathered about her. There was a lame duck which Belinda had rescued after a hunter had brought it down with a glancing shot; a carrier pigeon which had dropped exhausted on her doorstep; a mongrel dog of many colors which had been faithfully scrubbed by Miss Belinda and was now much cleaner if not happier than in his soiled state; there was also a fine collection of homeless cats. Indeed, Miss Belinda's place might have been another orphanage, so thickly was it populated with waifs.

"Would you rather have a boy or a girl?" asked Mrs. Brown craftily. But Miss Belinda was not to be caught that way.

"I'd rather have a cat," she said.

"You ought to be ashamed, Belinda Downs, the way you do talk! If you could see them poor young ones looking so wistful every time a visitor comes, hoping it's somebody to offer a home, you'd harness up Dolly this very instant and go and fetch one away."

"Might as well bring two while I was about it," remarked Miss Belinda ironically. "I've heard it said that it's cheaper for two to live than one. Ain't you heard that?"

"No, indeed. If that's the case, nine people ought to live for nothing, and I know we don't do that." Mrs. Brown jerked on her sunbonnet, shrugged her fat shoulders and without another word waddled down the path that led to the gate between the two places.

"Take an orphan, indeed!" sniffed Belinda for the hundredth time since the Riverview home had been erected. "Humph!" she ejaculated, also for the hundredth time.

Nevertheless, as soon as dinner was over Belinda did harness up shaggy little Dolly, and, climbing into the phaeton and bridling the lines very high in her mitted hands, she drove through the pine woods down to the Riverview home.

"I'd like to look at some orphans," said Belinda to the matron when she was seated in the darkened parlor of the home. "What kind have you?" she added, just as if orphans were vegetables or fruit in the market.

Mrs. Hill smiled in spite of the summer heat that nearly overpowered her bulk of flesh. "We have all kinds, even if we haven't got all colors," she said.

Thereupon there ensued a period of trying ordeals for tender hearted Belinda Downs.

Black hair and brown, red hair and tow, flaxen and pure gold all passed in review, and when it was all over there remained in the parlor a soft, round faced damsel of five years, with a soft mop of golden brown hair and a pair of eyes like brown velvet pansies flashed thickly with black. Belinda's heart was thumping rapidly while she interviewed the little girl for the last moment before giving her decision. The child was shy and gave timid, breathless little whispering answers, and Belinda loved her the more.

"Her name is Bessie Carson. Her mother died in the city hospital last March, and their records say that the child's father is dead. You can keep her for awhile, and if you are satisfied you can take out full papers of adoption if you wish to, Miss Brown."

"I guess I'll want to do that," said Miss Belinda as she arose to go. "When will Bessie be ready?" she asked, with a delightful sense of ownership in the dainty morsel of babyhood before her.

"This afternoon!" said Mrs. Hill. "You won't find her much trouble. She's a quiet little thing and speaks of her mother and the little baby that died, and, strangely enough, she asks for her father. Where's your father, Bessie, dear?" asked the matron, bending down.

"He'll be back in a little while," said Bessie, running to the window. "I guess I better look for him, hadn't I?"

"Quaint, isn't she?" whispered Mrs. Hill as she let Miss Belinda out.

"Very nice little girl," said Miss Belinda, trying to keep the happy sparkles out of her eyes, for it did not seem right to grasp so much happiness as was promised in the possession of little Bessie Carson. "I'll drive down after Bessie just before supper."

All the rest of the day she was very busy preparing for her orphan visitor. There was a small bed to drag down from the attic and place beside her own, and it had to be made up with all the miniature bedclothing which she had used as a child. There were old fashioned dolls and other toys to be resurrected from hair trunks and brushed and reburnished, and there was a batch of delicious ginger cookies to be made so that she might fashion a dozen gingerbread men and elephants with currant eyes for the delectation of little Bessie.

At last when all was in readiness and the little girl had been happily transferred to the phaeton and allowed to drive the gentle pony home there was never such unalloyed bliss as shone in the faces of Miss Belinda and her little orphan. The child loved Miss Belinda and clung to her with affection when she had a chance, and Miss Belinda was almost ashamed of the opportunities she afforded Bessie for showing her affection.

"It certainly can't harm anybody to enjoy being loved," protested Miss Belinda to her sterner self as she brushed away a tear.

"Is you crying, Miss Linda?" asked Bessie wistfully.

"Just a teenty bit, dear, because you love me so much," smiled Belinda, bending to kiss her charge.

"I smile when you love me," confided Bessie. "It makes me feel so good here." She placed a tiny hand on her heart. Miss Belinda kissed her again.

That happened after Bessie had been there three months. The adoption papers had all been made out and filed and Bessie Carson had become Bessie Downs when one afternoon the gate latch clicked sharply, and a tall man strode up the path and looked strangely down at little Bessie playing with her dolls at Miss Belinda's feet.

From her chair on the veranda Miss Belinda arose with a sinking feeling at her heart. This man was not from the home, although there was a strange familiarity in his tall, lean figure, his tanned cheeks, with the firm, beardless lips and chin. He did not look at Miss Belinda, but he pushed back his hat and held out his hands to little Bessie.

"Bess! Darling little Bess! Don't you know daddy?" he asked hoarsely.

With a startled cry the child looked at him earnestly and then ran straight to his arms with the unfailing instinct of the child for its parent.

Then the man looked up and saw Miss Belinda standing, white and shaking, before him. "I'm sorry, ma'am, but it's my little girl, and—Mercy! Linda Downs, what are you doing here with my Bessie?"

In the long, cool twilight there was time to relate how James Stearns had married the girl he had been engaged to when Belinda Downs met him in the west so many years ago and they had both fallen in love in spite of his previous engagement, but he had been true to his promise and married the girl who had been Bessie's mother; how one of the devastating floods of the west had separated the little family for months, and at last the wife and child had gone east in the hope of finding some of Mrs. Stearns' relatives. She had been taken ill in New York, registered by mistake under the name of Carson, had died and left the homeless little Bessie to the care of stranger hands.

In the meantime the distracted father had been hunting high and low for his family. He had traced them to New York, had proof of his wife's death and now had come to Little River to find that an all wise Providence had brought his little daughter into the empty, longing arms of the one woman in the world who could be his wife now.

When Emeline Brown heard of it she chuckled audibly. "Don't never sniff at orphans again, Belinda Downs," she admonished the bride. "You're under a debt of gratitude to me for pressing of you to take one."

But Belinda and her orphan—orphaned no longer—smiled contentedly at the man they both loved best in the world.

Soot.

Micro spectroscope analysis of chimney soot has shown that it contains iron, calcium, nickel, manganese, copper and silver.

Holystone.

The "holy stone" used in cleaning the decks of ships was so called from being originally used for Sunday cleaning and the fact that the seamen have to go on their knees to use it.

A Dangerous Dagger.

The late shah of Persia owned a dagger which is said to make its possessor invincible. But as the superstition is that he who uses it shall inevitably perish by it, it is kept securely locked in a sandalwood box.

BEAU BRUMMEL.

The Dandy Who Vied With George IV. for First Honors.

Brummel never pretended to be anything but a dandy. His recorded sayings prove that he was always ready to burlesque his own pose of exquisite fastidiousness and fragility. Thus he said that he had caught a cold because "on the Brighton road the other day, that infidel Weston (his valet) put me into a room with a damp stranger." There is also some merit in his poem "The Butterfly Funeral," particularly in this verse:

The Dormouse attended, but cold and forlorn,
And the Gnat slowly winded his shrill little horn,
And the Moth, who was grieved for the loss of a sister,
Bent over the body and silently kissed her.

Brummel seems to have done no harm to anyone except his creditors and to have had some kindness as well as shrewdness in his nature. Perhaps he wasted nothing except other people's money, for he may have been born a dandy, as Mozart was born a musician. If so, the fact remains that it is not well to be born a dandy, unless you can contrive to die young. Brummel lived to be sixty-two, and spent his last twenty four years in exile in France, with no object in life except to dress as well as he could in spite of a poverty which gradually became destitution.

Miss Clare Jerrold, in her book on "The Beaux and the Dandies," tells the story of his miserable end, and makes us see that at last he attained to a real dignity through suffering. He grew tattered and filthy, and one lady in Caen was the only person who would receive him. She was asked "How can you admit such a driveller?" and she answered, "He is never in our way; and though it is true he is not now the amusing character he once was, I like to see him take his seat before my fire."

At last his mind went, and he was admitted to a convent where the insane were kindly treated. There he died, more happily, perhaps, than his rival George IV., who never forgave him for being the finer dandy. —Times.

A HAPPY ACCIDENT.

H. G. Wells Owes His Literary Start to a Broken Blood Vessel.

In view of the criticisms aimed at him because of his recent books, "Ann Veronica" and "The New Machiavelli," H. G. Wells has written what might be called a defence, but which is in fact more of an attack on his critics and on life. He tells in his own way of his emergence from the teaching profession into literature:

"Then I toiled for years to become either a biological investigator or a teacher. I set my face sternly against the sort of work I do now, and which even then attracted me most, because I thought it a more unprofitable indulgence of the mind. I hammered at the doors of school and laboratory for a chance—for half a chance—for just a little bit of a chance to give my life to these things. I did not understand that both these worlds are ruled by academic cliques; that I should have entered either only to live a life of embittered obscurity. I should have spent my days in hampered, suppressed, or unrecognized researches, and in attempts to ventilate highly specialised grievances, lived, indeed, like a man swearing with his head in a bag. But my good luck in its usual disguise of misfortune intervened, and one day as I ran down Villiers street with a bag of rock specimens I had been showing to a class of candidates for the London Bachelor of Science degree, I coughed and broke a blood-vessel. Thereby I was stretched out, it seemed, a broken and ruined and almost penniless young man, and as I could do nothing else I wrote, and in a year found myself free to live anywhere and write as I liked, twice as prosperous as I had ever been in my life before."

And after all, say what you will, who does not rejoice when he finds himself, by his own honest efforts, twice as prosperous as he was before?

The Tall-Hatted Highlander.

Field Marshal Sir Evelyn Wood, V.C., who has recently formally assumed his new position as Constable of the Tower of London, surely holds the record for versatility among distinguished army officers, having served and fought in the navy, Light Dragoons, Lancers, Irregular Horse, and Highlanders, in addition to which he joined the Middle Temple and was called to the Bar in 1874, and is the author of works renowned for their high literary distinction. A good story may be told of his attachment to a regiment of Highlanders, when the latter were stationed at Portsmouth. Sir Evelyn, then a captain, one day returned from London, and with great hurry proceeded to array himself for parade. When he last emerged, he observed that his men were evidently at great pains to conceal their laughter, and he quietly questioned his subaltern as to the probable reason.

"Well, sir," replied the latter, "you are dressed correctly as to kilt, sporran, and all the rest of it; but you have forgotten to remove your tall hat!"

Insuring Jewels.

Some large insurances were offered to the companies and members of Lloyd's on jewels to be worn by Indian princes attending the coronation. One insurance for $425,000 was underwritten, and in another case the value of the property was between $1,000,000 and $2,000,000. In some instances the risks covered are those of transit to and from India, and that of burglary during the owner's stay in London.

Joint Stamp Issued.

For the first time in history a joint stamp, bearing the legends both of France and Britain, has been issued in the New Hebrides Islands, which are jointly administered in the two countries.

'Tis very like you were not there,
For reasons good, we know,
And so perhaps you may not care
For fifty years ago.
Yet these were lithe and stirring times,
Fit food for eloquence and rhymes.
Then ope the scroll and ring the chimes
Of fifty years ago.
—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

The wedding was over.

"Guests," announced the usher, "will kindly register their predictions in this book."

"What predictions?"

"As to how long you'll give 'em to stay married." — Louisville Courier-Journal.

Lettres de Cachet.

Lettres de cachet was the name given in France to warrants sealed with the king's seal ordering persons to be thrown into prison or exiled. The first came into use about 1670 and shortly became one of the popular terrors of France. It is said that no less than 9,000 lettres de cachet were issued during the reign of Louis XIV. and 80,000 during the reign of Louis XV. In many cases these terrible documents were secretly sold and used as a source of illicit revenue. They were frequently signed in blank, and the holder of one of these royal terrors could write in the name of any person against whom he happened to have a grudge. The national assembly abolished this iniquitous privilege of issuing lettres de cachet on Nov. 1, 1789.

Juvenile Logic.

Little Mabel's mother was expecting Mabel's auntie on a visit. Just as she was almost due to arrive a telegram came, which read: "Missed train. Will start at same time tomorrow."

Mabel hurried home from school, expecting to greet her auntie, instead of which she was shown the telegram. She read it through carefully and laboriously, and then she remarked:

"How silly of auntie, mamma!"

"Why, dear?" inquired her mother.

"Well, don't you see that if she starts at the same time tomorrow she will miss the train again."—Illustrated Bits.

BLED THEM WHITE.

The Treatment in Fever Cases Till Quinine Wrought a Change.

In 1832, when the French were conducting a campaign of conquest in Algeria, the mortality among the troops and colonists there was frightful. France was being continually called upon for fresh levies of men and youths to supply this terrible loss, chiefly from fever incidental to the climate.

At that time the practice of bleeding still prevailed. "Bleed them till they are white" was the injunction which Broussais, the head physician of the French, gave to his followers when the condition of the soldiers was reported to him.

At Bone in one year out of an effective force of 5,500 men, 1,160 died of illness in the hospital. Most of them had been "bled to the white."

At this time the effects of sulphate of quinine were known, but few physicians ventured to employ it. One, Maillot, had interested himself in the new remedy and, going to Bone in the medical service of the government, resolved to see if it would not reduce the frightful mortality, which was one to every three and one-half men who entered the hospital.

At first he employed the quinine merely as an adjunct to the bleeding. He soon found that bleeding was killing the men and that quinine was saving them. Little by little he left off bleeding, to the great scandal of the medical profession.

Exactly in proportion as the bleeding ceased the deaths in the hospital decreased. In two years the deaths fell off from one in three and a half of all who entered the hospital to one in twenty and finally to one in forty-six.

Maillot, quite naturally enough, became an earnest opponent of bleeding, but he was so actively resisted and so ceaselessly vilified that he became embittered toward his colleagues.

Nearly thirty years passed before Maillot saw the complete triumph of his ideas. Doctors continued to bleed their patients heartily for all manner of ills. But in 1860 Maillot was made commander of the Legion of Honor and chief of the medical staff of the French army, and his influence, with others, in bringing about a virtual revolution in the practice of medicine was fully recognized.—Harper's Weekly.

Missed a Train That Was a Day Late.

When the Swits City division of the Illinois Central was built it was known as the Indiana and Illinois Southern. It was a narrow gauge road; the roadbed was bad, the engines and cars were built on a miniature scale, and, while there was a schedule, had a train been on time the fact would have been regarded as a miracle. The road was known as the "Try-Weakly." On one occasion Josiah McConnell desired to go to Swits City from Sullivan, but missed the train by a minute or two. The clock at the station showed that the train had left Sullivan five minutes ahead of time, and McConnell sued the railroad company for $5,000 damages. On a trial of the case it was proved beyond a doubt that the train McConnell missed should have gone the day before and was really twenty-three hours and fifty-five minutes late.

"The Silent Man."

As General Commissioner of Police, Sir Edward Henry had the arduous task of making adequate police arrangements to deal with the huge crowds of people who assembled in London on June 22nd and 23rd. Known as "The Silent Man," on account of his quiet, unassuming, unassertive manner, Sir Edward made his mark as the Inspector-General of Police in Bengal, and is famous for his introduction of the system of recognition by finger-marks, which has brought so many light-fingered gentry to just punishments.

THE EVENING CHIT-CHAT

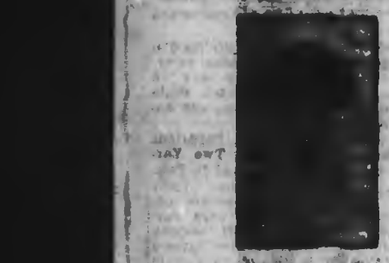
By Ruth Cameron

TO have to wait on a sick person, in addition to doing one's regular work, is hard, no matter how well beloved the invalid.

Everyone who has ever tried amateur nursing knows that.

But there is one thing even more trying. And that is to be obliged to be waited on by someone who has other work to do, no matter how well intentioned and affectionate the nurse. Everyone who has ever been amateur nursed must emphatically realize that.

For the sake both of the amateur nurse and the amateur nursee, may I suggest a few simple rules gained from experience on both sides of the fence?



Before bringing up the tray-stand to the patient imagine yourself eating the meal spread upon it. By doing this you may recall to mind any implement or accessory such as spoon or fork or salt or sugar, which you have forgotten. These things seem small to you, but to the patient they mean much. He does not like to ask you to go downstairs for the salt, and yet the absence of it may spoil his egg for him.

If you are obliged to be absent for some time, give your invalid a piece of paper and a pencil that he may write down any request that occurs to him during your absence and not have to carry them in his head.

Tidy up the room and especially the bed frequently. We all know how cluttered with magazines and books and so forth a sick bed can become. We don't realise how much such confusion tires. A student of labour conditions says that a bricklayer can't do his work half so well when standing on a cluttered floor. The patient himself may not fully realize the bad effects of the clutter but he suffers from it just the same.

Acquire if you can the fine art of arranging pillows. Most people when called upon to arrange pillows simply plump down a couple at your back and let it go at that. I don't think one can sit up comfortably in bed with less than three pillows. And they should be scientifically arranged to support the middle of the back, the shoulders and the head.

Have your patient sit up in a big easy chair instead of in bed, when possible, as sitting up in bed is very tiring.

Never forget how much longer time seems to the invalid reckoning in terms of pain and ennui than it does to your reckoning in terms of activity.

Do not insist upon doing things for the invalid when he feels that you are entertaining yourself. Fretting over this may do him more harm than your service would do good.

And above all things, remember that unless you give in love and forbearance and cheerfulness, the value of your service is nil. For grudging service to the sick is quite as cruel as neglect.

IMPORTANT REPORTS PRESENTED TO COUNCIL

Messrs. Ross and Holgate and the Hydro-Electric Commission Give Particulars of Dickson Company Proposition.

SPECIAL MEETING HELD

A special meeting of the Council was held last night to pass judgment on certain reports relative to that all important question, The Power Problem.

There were present His Worship Mayor Morrow, Ald. Metheral, Ald. Bradburn, Ald. Morgan, Ald. Anderson, Ald. Graham, Ald. Edgar, Ald. Kernaghan, Ald. Duncan, and Ald. Buller.

The question, which is fast becoming an antediluvian one, was freely discussed. The time has now arirved when some definite action will have to be taken, as the option on the Dickson dam will expire in about ten days. At the commencement of the attack, the attitude of the city fathers assumed a threatening aspect, and it looked as though the question would be close hauled and disposed of in short order, but this proved to be mere conjecture, as the question was a serious one and one that required careful consideration, more particularly in view of the fact that a large sum of money was involved.

Three distinct reports were read dealing with the Dickson dam proposition. The first one, which is from the Chairman of the Power Committee, was as follows:

Gentleman,—Your Power Committee beg leave to report as follows:

Acting on instructions received from you, when we received the option from the Dickson Company on their power property at Lakefield, we communicated with several engineers with a view to obtaining a report on the property.

We had an interview with the Acting Chief Engineer of the Ontario Hydro-Electric Power Commission, and, with his concurrence, engaged the firm of Ross & Holgate, of Montreal, to make a report, the Hydro-Electric Commission to act in an advising and consulting capacity in the matter.

Messrs. Ross and Holgate came here and examined the property and enquired into the matter of distribution, and later sent in their report. We sent that report to the Hydro-Electric Commission for their advice, and this morning we received a report from the Commission. Herewith are submitted the reports of Ross & Holgate and of the Hydro-Electric Commission.

In view of the cost of power delivered in Peterborough from Lakefield, as shown by the reports, we cannot recommend that the option given by the Dickson Company be taken up.

We recommend that this Committee be authorized to continue negotiations with the Dickson Company to ascertain whether the property can be procured at a price at which the city can safely purchase it, and also to take such other steps as the Committee deems advisable towards securing power for the city.

The second report, which is from the firm of Ross & Holgate, of Montreal, deals fully with the financial aspect of the question.

RE POWER DEVELOPMENT AND DISTRIBUTION

In compliance with the instructions in yours of the 11th July, we have made an investigation of the power available at the Dickson dam at Lakefield and an examination of the conditions existing in the City of Peterborough to determine the best method of generating and distributing the power available and determining the capital cost and operating charges of the plant.

We have subdivided this report under the following heads:

1. General conditions at power site and in the City.
2. The horse-power available at the site and in the City.
3. Power house and machinery.
4. Transmission line and sub-station.
5. Distribution to customers in the City.
6. Operating and fixed charges, revenues and profits.
7. Table of capital costs, operating and fixed charges, revenue and profits.

GENERAL CONDITIONS

We understand that the City has an option from the Dickson Company for the purchase of the water power site on the Otonabee River near Lakefield, at a price of $200,000.00, and that the development of this site is contemplated in conjunction with a dam to be constructed by the Government.

It was found that the existing dam is old and in bad condition, and leaks to such an extent as to make it quite impracticable for water power purposes on a scale greater than it is now used for. A new dam will have to be built by the Government for Canal purposes, and if constructed further down stream at a point between lock No. 2 and the sawmill a fairly good place can be selected for a power development. If, however, the dam be rebuilt at or near its present location, a long headrace will have to be built so as to get the use of the head of 16 feet, this adding largely to the cost.

There appears to be no objection to the Government building the dam at the site suggested, provided the property owners on the East side of the River agree to the flooding of the land, and a long protecting wall be built up stream from the dam. In dealing with this question further we have assumed that the Government will build the dam at the position chosen by them lower down the River than the present dam site, and all without cost to the City.

POWER AVAILABLE

With a dam constructed at the spot above indicated, a head of 16 feet will be available. The minimum flow of the River is not at present in excess of 1,400 cubic feet per second, but if the work of conserving the waters in the upper lakes be carried on the minimum flow will probably be increased to 2,000 cubic feet per second.

We give below a table showing in the first column the minimum and the dependable all the year round flow of the River for present conditions, and also for conditions as they should exist if the conservation of the upper waters be made.

In the second column is shown the electrical horse power which may be generated under these different conditions, making due allowances for losses in water wheels and electrical generators.

In the third column the power which can be delivered in Peterborough is shown under the same conditions of flow, with due allowances for transmission lines to and transformation at Peterborough:

From the above table it will be seen that the dependable flow for the year at present will yield at Peterborough 1,984 horse-power, while, with conservation, this will be raised to 2,800 horse-power, all delivered at Peterborough on the distributing lines in the City.

POWER HOUSE AND MACHINERY

To meet the existing conditions, we recommend the provision of a concrete and brick power house for a total capacity of 3,000 horse-power, with the installation at present of a sufficient capacity in wheels and generators to deliver 2,000 horse-power in Peterborough.

The generators, of which two are to be installed at once, will be wound for 12,000 volts, which is suitable for direct transmission without transformation in the generating station.

When conservation justifies the increase, a third unit, giving an additional 1,000 horse-power, can be installed. We have, therefore, allowed in our estimates for a plant sufficient for the delivery at the present time in Peterborough of 2,000 horse-power, and for the future a delivery of 3,000 horse-power, if required.

TRANSMISSION LINE AND SUB-STATION

From the power house, near Lakefield, to the centre of Peterborough, a transmission line approximating 12 miles will be constructed, consisting of a heavy single wooden pole line with copper to carry 2,000 horse-power and with provision on the poles for a second similar circuit, which would probably be constructed when the third power unit was installed.

No allowance for cost of right of way has been made, as it is anticipated that this can easily be obtained along the highways, and the voltage being only 12,000, can be transmitted to the centre of the City to a sub-station, located in the most favourable spot for distribution.

The sub-station is to be equipped at present with three 250 K.W. transformers, with a space allowance for the installation of three more, to take up the whole of the first development of 2,000 horse-power. This station will also contain the ten regulating equipments necessary to control the incandescent street lighting, and is provided with the necessary switching for the transmission and distributing circuits. The station will also include a storeroom for meters and supplies, and a small office at which accounts can be kept and bills paid.

DISTRIBUTION

From the sub-station located in a central position within a block or two of the corner of George and Hunter Streets, the distributing circuits for street lighting, private lighting, and power will be run.

In conformity with modern tendencies, we have eliminated all arc lighting, and recommend on the main streets high candle power incandescent lamps in groups, and on the less important streets, and especially on the streets that are heavily treed, frequent incandescent lamps of lower candle power, which will give a better distribution than the ordinary arc lamp and at a less cost.

Inasmuch as the City will have to be poled in all streets for this service, no further poling will be necessary for the customers' requirements. The whole of the pole costs have been charged to the street lighting.

The supply of lighting to private customers has been estimated under two conditions, viz., for 500 customers and for 1,000 customers. The first being selected as being easily obtainable at first, the second as being probably obtainable later in view of the competition of two other companies, and on the assumption that the City will get its proportionate share of the total customers available.

The incandescent and power circuits are charged only with the necessary wire insulators, cross arms, transformers, house connections and meters, but no poles.

As the street lighting and the private incandescent lighting for 500 and 1,000 customers will total practically 560 horse-power and 1000 horse-power respectively, the cost of the distribution for these services has been worked out on the basis of 500 horse-power, 1000 horse-power.

With 1,000 horse-power utilized for street and private lighting, there remains a possible 2,000 horse-power available for other purposes. A part of this may be used for incandescent lighting if more customers can be obtained, but the bulk will probably be sold to motor customers for power purposes, and we have therefore assumed in our figures that 1,000 horse-power, and eventually 2,000 horse-power, may be sold as power to make up the total possible development at the power plant.

As it is impossible to estimate where or how this motor load will be sold, we have had to make an assumption, viz., that each power customer will take on the average 10 horse-power, which will mean eventually 200 power customers, for which transformers and line will have to be provided, and the capital costs of this additional distribution in the city has been allowed for.

CAPITAL COST

The table below indicates the capital cost under four conditions:

1. For 500 horse-power for street lighting and incandescent customers only.
2. For 1,000 horse-power sold for street lighting and to incandescent customers only.
3. For 2,000 horse-power, of which 1,000 is for lighting as above and 1,000 for power.
4. For 3,000 horse-power, of which 1,000 is used for lighting as above and 2,000 for power.

The water power site has been taken in each case at $200,000.00.

The power station has been laid out for a present equipment of 2,000 horse-power, with a later increase to 3,000.

Lines and sub-station have been figured for 1,000 horse-power at the present, 2,000 horse-power later, and 3,000 horse-power eventually.

The distribution has been figured for 500 horse-power at the present 1,000 horse-power later, 2,000 horse-power thereafter, and 3,000 horse-power eventually.

It will be noted that several of the larger items are identical, so that the capital cost per horse-power sold will be high for the smaller sales. To each item, with the exception of the water power site, has been added 10 per cent. for engineering and contingencies, and it will be seen that even under the best conditions the capital required will be high, and this will be reflected in the fixed charges. This is due very largely to the high cost of the power site.

OPERATING COSTS

Under the same heading as before are indicated the operating costs for the four assumptions. These include wages, supplies, repairs and expenses of all kinds, chargeable to the plant, but independent of interests, sinking fund, and depreciation.

We would call attention to the general expense, of which a large part is taxes, which we assumed at 1 per cent of the taxable property. If these be not imposed the item will be reduced, but we think it only fair to call attention to this point.

The total includes all items of management, office expenses, etc., and appears to be fair for a proposition of this size, although very high in the first two columns considering the sales.

FIXED CHARGES

In the four columns on the same basis as before are arranged the amounts payable yearly for interest, sinking fund and depreciation. Interest has been assumed at 4 p.c. sinking fund, 1 p.c. while depreciation is varied between the different items (except the power site, which should not depreciate in value), at from 1 to 6 p.c. depending upon the nature of the equipment.

Revenues and Profits.

Any estimates of revenues and profits under the competition of two other plants in the same city is exceedingly difficult, and must be approached conservatively, and based upon previous experience under somewhat similar conditions.

On this basis, but somewhat hesitatingly, we have figured the total revennes conservatively, under the four conditions referred to above. For the incandescent street lighting, we have assumed what we understood to be the case, viz., that you have about 250 arc lamps, which cost $50 per lamp per year. As a matter of fact, with the system we have laid out for incandescent lighting, the condition of the streets will be very much improved, and it would perhaps have been fairer to allow a higher charge for this service.

For incandescent customers we have allowed a fair revenue from our experience in similar places, under similar conditions, and for power customers, we have taken these at the low average of $25.00 per horse power, considering the average customers, as before stated, as taking 10 horse power each on the average. These figures all appear on the sheets at the end of this report, and indicate that in order to cover all charges 1000 incandescent customers will be necessary, plus about 500 horse power in motors, while if a total of 2000 horse power can be sold for all purposes the proposition is on a very sound basis.

The third report is from the Engineer of the Commission, and deals with the Ross and Holgate report in an advisory manner towards the city. It was as follows:

The Hon. Adam Beck, Chairman, Hydro-Electric Power Commission—

Dear Sir,—Attached hereto is a copy of an estimate prepared by Ross & Holgate dealing with the cost of developing power at the Dickson dam at Lakefield and transmitting and distributing same in the city of Peterborough.

This estimate was prepared for the City Council of Peterborough for the purpose of determining whether or not it is economically feasible for the city to procure power in commercial quantities from this point.

In Ross & Holgates estimate it will be noticed that the new dam is assumed to be located at the point most suitable for the development of power. The location of this dam is altogether under the jurisdiction of the Trent Canal authorities, but it will presumably be located where it can be most cheaply built to meet the requirements of the navigation. If the location shown by the canal authorities is not the one suitable for purposes of power development the capital cost will be considerably increased, as noted in the attached report.

The present minimum flow is estimated 1400 second feet, which is reasonable, in view of the existing facts as to the flow of the Otonabee river.

They have estimated the minimum flow under conservation at 2000 second feet with a probable dependable flow of 2400 second feet basing the latter estimate on the good facilities for peak storage available at Lakefield. In view of the present advanced stage of storage regulation in the Trent waters shed the estimate of 2000 second feet is probably the extreme limit of minimum flow, which can be safely considered.

The estimates of continuous electric h.p. capacity of the Dickson site, as given for the present flow and ultimate conserved flow may, therefore, be considered reasonable; the 24 hour capacity under present conditions using 1667 E.H.P., and under conserved flow 2667 E.H.P. operating under a head of 16 ft.

The capital costs estimated by Ross & Holgate are safe, and their estimates of annual charges are very liberal. As these figures stand they show that the scheme will not be on a paying basis until something like 2000 H.P. is sold at the rates set forth in their estimate of revenue.

With regard to the rates, as estimated in this report, it would appear that the estimated revenue for incandescent customers is largely in excess of what might be reasonably expected under conditions as they are at Peterborough at the present time. The same thing applies to the estimated revenue for power, though not to so great an extent as in the case of incandescent lighting.

In the matter of revenue for street lighting, this class of service is non-competative, and the city may charge itself any price which seems fair in proportion to the service rendered.

In connection with the above reports the following was moved by Ald. Morgan, seconded by Ald. Edgar, that the Hon. Adam Beck of the Hydro-Electric Power Commission, be asked by Ald. Bradburn to come to Peterborough and confer with the Council in regard to power for the city, or if he cannot come here, to meet the Council in Toronto, and that the report of the Power Committee be laid over in the meantime.

Ald. Graham moved that the Chairman of the Board of Works and City Engineer be given power to purchase machinery and material, such as needed for the construction of the South End sewer, and that the wages of the men employed be paid on the certificate of the Engineer. This was seconded by Ald. Edgar and carried unanimously by those present.

Ald Metheral explained that in connection with the above work a new centrifugal pump would probably be needed. This would involve a cost of about $75 or $80.

The work of completing the sewer has been taken over by the city and with the assistance of Mr. Wade, who has been appointed foreman, will be pushed to completion as rapidly as possible.

Application was made by Mr. Joseph Meyett for admittance into the Deaf and Dumb Institute, Belleville, of his 12-year-old son. It was necessary to secure a statement from the city regarding his inability to pay for the child's maintenance before the necessary papers could be secured for the child's admittance into the institution. This was granted.

The meeting was then adjourned until further notice.

URIC ACID SUFFERING

Uric acid is an accumulation of poison which finds lodgment in the system when the kidneys fail to remove it from the blood. In the kidneys and bladder it forms stones, in the joints and muscles it causes rheumatism. In any case the pain and suffering is almost beyond human endurance. Uric acid is promptly removed from the system when the kidneys are kept healthy and active by using Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills.

BRITISH-BORN WORKINGMAN PUTS THE CASE REASONABLY

Peterborough, Aug. 24th.

THE COMING ELECTION.

As several of your correspondents have taken up the question of the coming election, and have expressed their views upon it, I would like, with your permission, to express my views from the standpoint of a British-born Grit.

In the first place, I have hoped after several years of residence in this country, to see a parliamentary election, run upon a straight party question, but up till now, my hopes have not been realized..

After reading the various reports of the proceedings of the late parliament I was of the opinion that the great question they went to the people on was the question of reciprocity with the United States, as far as natural products were concerned, but since the dissolution, various red herrings have been dragged across the scent by the Conservative candidates, especially in this riding, for no other purpose than to throw voters off the main question that should lay before them and demand their attention. In the first place, the usual race and creed this time it is the Ne Temere question Then we have the loyalty cry, then annexation and heaven only knows how many more will rise from the Conservative graveyard of exploded schemes before Sept. 21st.

A word as regards the creed cry. never heard the cry from the Conservative party when the late Sir John Thompson was in power. There were no such schemes as the Protestan Federation League brought into existence then, but now all is changed, because it is a French Liberal, of the same faith, that is in power, so tha the whole thing goes to show that a fas as the creed cry goes, it simply amounts to the one thing—anything to beat Laurier. Surely it is now time that such cries as are being raised as to a man's religion, should be left out of the region of politics altogether, and elect the man, whoever he may be, that is most capable of ruling the destinies of this dominion in the best interests of all concerned.

Then comes the loyalty cry. What does that amount to? Not much. I would like Mr. Burnham and his associates to prove that we who vote on the Liberal side are disloyal. I myself ,have yet to see where the Conservative party has so excelled itself above all others in loyalty. It certainly was not when it was proposed to send contingents to South Africa, at the time of the Boer war when, according to all reports, Mr. Burnham was in sympathy with the Boers. Neither was it when it was proposed to form a navy to assist, if necessary, when wanted and to bear our share in support of it. Now, to crown the deal, they are enlisting the support of Messrs. Bourassa, Monk and the Nationalists of Quebec.

Oh, no, Mr. Burnham, you will find when the time comes, if ever it does, when the empire is in danger and the British lion raises her head and roars, you will find that Canada, Grit and Tory ,will answer, in no uncertain sound, and then, though they may differ as far as party is concerned, when it comes to the defence and loyalty to the Motherland, they are shoulder to shoulder. They have done it before, and they will do it again.

As to the annexation cry. That is a periodical cry, a kind of specific that arises every time any business is attempted to be done with the United States. I would like to know how this annexation is to take place, for sure it will, according to Mr. Burnham. He tells the electors: 'Wait till the Yankees get hold of us. Are we going to sit with folded arms, while the Stars and Stripes are run up over our heads?' Are we, because the two nations see fit to come to some understanding, as regards our tariff, going to hand over our allegiance at the same time? There is no man, outside of an asylum, that honestly believes it. The memory of Lundy's Lane and Queenston Heights have not as yet faded away. What we gained there, we hold to-day.

In coming to the main question—will reciprocity benefit, or will it not—we are told that the farmers will be benefitted. But how about the working classes? In answering this question, it might be well to see those who are so bitter against the question. We find trusts, combines and monopolies now. We can rest assured that none of these are working in favour of the working man to-day. We have our wheat markets ruled by a monopoly, our cattle trade the same, the packing houses the same, and we have to pay any price that they may compel the middle man to ask, for that such rings do exist, none will deny. The main question, is the price the consumer pays, and the producer gets, for his products, one season with another. The farmer that produces the hog gets paid. When the consumer gets the bacon he pays some 20c. per lb. and sometimes a little more. The farmer that produces the beef gets some 5 1-2c. per lb. The consumer, when he wants a roast of beef, pays on an average about 15c. per lb. If reciprocity is likely to do away with and break up some of these evils, I say give it a trial.

There is another class against the quest ion. That is the Manufacturers' Association, the greatest of all combines. I fail to see where they are going to be touched to such an extent as they would have us believe. There is no more protected monopoly existing to-day. They rule the price of labour, and to-day they are flooding our cities with imported labour to compete against our own. Only the other day I spoke to a rank Conservative, who was grumbling about the low rate of wages he was receiving. I asked why he did not ask for more money. The answer he gave me was this: What is the use when the Manufacturers' Association is sending men over by the shipload. Still, he is working for the party that is protecting the manufacturers.

To hear some of these manufacturers speak, that if reciprocity comes in force they will have to close down—they will not be able to run, you would think they were public benefactors and they, and only they, had the interests of the working man at heart. I fail to see for one moment where reciprocity is going to hurt the manufacturing interests. It does not look like it when we see agricultural implement factories going up, as they are at present.

Now, I think I have trespassed upon your space too much. I will now bring this to a conclusion by asking the working men to weigh this matter carefully upon its merits, and leaving out all side issues, for evidently it is an important move, and one that, as far as I can see, will be beneficial to all concerned.

Yours truly.
BRITISH BORN.

SAGE AND SULPHUR CURES DANDRUFF

Restores Faded and Gray Hair to Natural Color—Itching Scalp Quickly Stopped.

This applies to Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Hair Remedy, for if it does not do exactly what is claimed for it, the sales would naturally drop off. However, Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Hair Remedy does "make good," as evidenced by its daily increasing sales. EXPERIENCES IN ALEXANDRIA AN INTERESTING DESCRIPTION

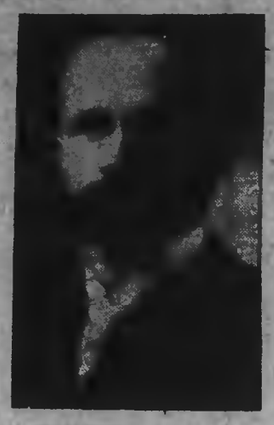
Breezy Letter to the Examiner From Mr. B. Lastar, Formerly of Peterborough, Who is Attending the Congress of the Zionists

ORIENTAL SCENES



MR. B. LASTAR,
Formerly of Peterborough, Who is Contributing a Series of Interesting Letters to the Examiner.

The Examiner publishes below a most interesting letter from Mr. Bernard Lastar, formerly of Peterborough, who is at present attending the great Congress of the Zionists in Switzerland. In a series of letters Mr. Lastar will give the people of Peterborough, through the Examiner, his experiences, dealing more particularly with Palestine. His first communication is as follows:

To the Editor of The Examiner.

Dear Sir,—As I promised, I am writing to you of what I saw and experienced during my journey to the Congress of the Zionists at Basel, Switzerland. In order to study this movement I have decided to go first to Palestine and Jerusalem, and I have accomplished considerable work, as far as seeing the ways and habits of the different races of humanity.

In order to give a full report I will start with my journey from New York on June 28th, on the Olympic of the White Star line, the biggest ship in the world. The first thing of interest on the voyage was the appearance of an aeroplane, about half an hour after we sailed, which circled our ship and then went back to land. It was a wonderful sight to the passengers who marvelled at the apparently simple way in which it was managed.

Our journey was continued in beautiful weather until we reached Cherbourg, on July 5th, where we got connections at once for Paris, arriving at 3.30 p. m., going on to Marseilles, arriving at 9.30 a.m. the next day, and being fortunate enough to connect with a steamer for Alexandria at 12.30 p.m. I noticed the difference in accommodation and service of this ship at once. She was a French boat and began to shake badly at the start, and rolled along until we passed Corsica and Bonifacio, on July 7. On the 8th we passed Sardinia, and in the afternoon Messina, and later, Regio Calabria. Our steamer passed so close to the shore that we could see quite plainly the ruins and traces of destruction left from the last earthquake.

Alexandria Impressions.

We arrived in Alexandria, Egypt, on Wednesday, July 12th, the first of the Oriental cities of interest. To a man not accustomed to this sort of life and habits it seems to him that he is in a moving-picture show, and I had to pinch myself to see if I was not dreaming. The variety of people, and their strange ways of conducting their business in their narrow, poorly built and most unsanitary houses, makes one marvel how the people can live there. In Alexandria I can safely say there is represented every nationality in the world, each in his own costume and with his own language. The noise and movements of the people are deafening, so that you can hardly hear your own voice. Often you are stopped and cannot move further. You are wondering what is wrong, but on pushing to the front you find to your astonishment, a donkey and his master, the Arabian, at the sidewalk having their dinner. I must also mention that the width of the sidewalk is not more than three feet, and everyone who wants to pass must get off the walk. Sometimes you can't make your way off the pavement because there are in the road natives with all kinds of merchandise, and you have to make your way the best way you can. A little further on you have to get off the sidewalk again. This time you find a table and chairs with people sitting and smoking, or drinking and playing games.

They Dress Alike.

At last you get out of this neighbourhood and find that you are coming into a more modern street? You see before business places a finer class of people. But here again your curiosity is aroused. When you see people walking in our country, we have the advantage of being able to distinguish men from women. Here however, you find men and women dressed almost the same, each wearing long coats and trousers. When you get close to them, however, you can see a difference. The women have their faces either wholly, or partly covered and may be recognised also by their leg-bracelets.

Going on a little further you come on a side street and find your passage blocked with tables and chairs, not only on the sidewalk, but on the road. There is only room left for one to pass. Life is at its brightest here at night, because in the daytime it is impossible to remain very long in one place in the sun. The heat is unbearable, simply awful. At night you see the whole street crammed with tables, most of them occupied. Here you can buy anything imaginable; everything is brought to the table—wearing apparel, souvenirs, cigars, candies, and cakes. Live pigeons, if ordered, are killed and boiled while you wait. The same treatment is accorded fish and even dogs. The noise of these hawkers, if you are not accustomed to it, is unbearable. I sat at one of these tables until 10.30 p.m., and then went back to the hotel.

An Immoral City.

Alexandria is very immoral. White slavery is at its worst in Egypt, and Alexandria beats everything in existence. I was thinking that our missionaries, if they wanted to do the most good, could find work enough here for years to come.

I thought I had had enough of Alexandria and was intending to go to Cairo next day, but the following morning I found something which brightened Alexandria in my eyes, and that was a school, a Hebrew school. The educational conditions among the natives are very deplorable. On account of their poverty they send their children to earn their living when they are only nine or ten years old, sometimes even younger, so that there are very few educated natives. There are few schools compared to the population of the place, but the Jewish congregation in Alexandria is exceptionally well provided for everything that culture demands is provided in every branch of education—spiritual, moral, and physical. The poor are looked after in a most efficient way, a system hardly to be found equalled in the world. There are two schools, one maintained by Baron Von Manosha, a noble of Spanish-Jewish descent, who bears the entire cost of clothing, feeding, and educating 600 children, and the other kept up by the congregation, where there are 1,200 students, all dressed alike. The food is the same for rich and poor children. All receive the same treatment. There are no special privileges for the rich, even if their fathers are the wealthiest in the city. The boy or girl who finishes in this school is capable of earning his or her own living, as they learn various industries. The most capable scholars are assisted by special lessons. There are fifty scholarships each year for those who can attend university, while there is a business college for those who want a business training. The girls are taught housework—knitting, cooking, painting and music. There are extra lessons for all in singing. The school is the pride of Alexandria with all classes of citizens and is respected by everyone.

A Visit to Cairo.

I visited Cairo, which is quite a different city—more in the European style. The houses are separated, and are fortified with high walls, while nearly all the windows are barred with iron bars. Near Cairo, I visited the world's famous pyramids, three in number. The highest is about 450 feet and when you get to the top, which is six feet square you can get a wonderful view from there. I, however, felt dizzy, and had difficulty in getting down. Inside there is a small entrance, barely enough for a man to creep in. Here there is a room which is supposed to have been the resting place of the first Pharoh, King of Egypt. The sphinx is a wonderful structure, but the face has been shot and disfigured in many places. On my return to Cairo I visited that wonderful museum where the famous mummies are. To describe all the sights there would require a whole book.

In an interview with a student in Cairo he told me that the reason the people were not entirely satisfied with the British Government was because they are not permitted the same privileges as the Europeans, neither in courts of justice or in social life.

From Cairo I went to Port Said, a small town with nothing much of interest. Then I sailed for Jaffa, Palestine. The description of this land of interest, together with my experiences and interesting interviews I will give you in my following letter. I remain, Yours truly.

B. Lastar.

Note.—I am at present at the Congress in Switzerland and am very busy working on the Palestine Commission, of which I was appointed a member. It is the most important commission of the movement.

SHE GAINED 35 LBS.

Mrs. George Bradshaw, Harlowe, Ont., writes: "I was troubled for many years with weak, watery blood and dropsy. I had nervous headaches, dizziness, and sinking spells, and was, in fact, a semi-invalid. Doctors told me my heart and kidneys were diseased and gave me up. By using 10 boxes of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food I have been cured of many of my old complaints and gained 35 pounds in weight."

AT THE PARSONAGE

Tea and Coffee Ban Riot No Longer

"Wife and I had a serious time of it while we were tea and coffee drinkers.

"She had gastritis, headaches, belching, and would have periods of sickness, while I secured a daily headache that became chronic.

"We naturally sought relief by drugs without avail, for it is now plain enough that no drug will cure the diseases other drugs (tea and coffee) set up, particularly, so long as the drug which causes the trouble is continued.

"Finally, we thought we would try leaving off tea and coffee and using Postum. Inoticed that my headache disappeared like magic and my old 'trembly' nervousness left. One day wife said, 'Do you know my gastritis has gone?'

"One can hardly realize what Postum has done for us.

"Then we began to talk to others. Wife's father and mother were both tea and coffee drinkers and sufferers. Their headaches left entirely a short time after they changed from tea and coffee to Postum.

"I began to inquire among my parishioners and found to my astonishment that numbers of them use Postum in place of tea and coffee. Many of the ministers who have visited our parsonage have become enthusiastic champions of Postum." Name given by Canadian Postum Co., Windsor, Ontario.

BATHERS LOOK BLUE

The Amusing Side of the Dip Delightful—A President Taft Story

Although the simple delights of bathing have often a ludicrous side, the bather himself takes a long time to see it, as a rule. That is not surprising. Humor comes amiss to a scantily-clad and wet man when he himself is the object of that humor!

Bognor witnessed a bathing comedy a couple of seasons ago which afforded considerable amusement—to the crowd. About midday a visitor who had been bathing at the pierhead reported to the piermaster that another bather who had gone into the water an hour before had disappeared. Everyone became excited. The police took charge of the missing bather's clothes; and a dozen motor and rowing-boats began dragging operations. Bognor's well-known bathing woman, Mary Wheatland, who has saved many lives, also came to help.

And after nearly an hour's dragging operations without finding a body, a man in a bathing costume came up and complained to the piermaster that his clothes had been stolen from a bathing-box. It was the "drowned" man. The simple explanation was that he had gone [illegible] distance to join another bathing party. He had [illegible] or until the police b[illegible] back, while the holiday c[illegible]on and enjoyed it[illegible].

"Lost, clothes [illegible] important part in [illegible] Two Yarmouth holiday[illegible]ed to Caister one Saturday to bathe. Their clothes they put on the seashore, under the shelt[illegible], but, all at once, portions of the cliff broke off, burying the clothes; and although the bathers dug away with their hands they could not reach their clothes. At last they had to get help from a camp near by, and after an hour's digging the clothes were unearthed.

It must be confessed that in many places along the Irish coast the bathing arrangements are distinctly primitive. The writer visited one Irish seaside town last year, and found that bathing-machines were practically unknown, while for bathing-costumes—well, you were supposed to slip out of the house in your night attire and get into the water as quickly as possible. The result was that, in the early morning, front doors opened, and out came figures clad in all sorts and conditions of night-robes, who skipped across the beach right into the water. Afterwards you were supposed to walk home again with your garments "clinging like cerements"!

A good bathing story is told of President Taft, who is, to say the least of it, of generous proportions.

"When he was touring through Colorado some time ago, the municipal authorities of one town solemnly presented him with a gigantic bathing-suit, and invited him to bathe before the multitude. The President declined.

"The last time I bathed in public," said he, "I overheard a conversation between two men who were watching me. 'If I were as fat as that man,' said one to the other, 'I would make a point of bathing in private.' And so," concluded Mr. Taft, "I will."—Answers.

A FUNNY PROPOSITION

The Boston Transcript makes the very pertinent remark that man is a funny proposition, because, when he reads a medical book, he fancies he has every disease described; but when he reads the work of a moralist all the faults that are pointed out he sees, not in himself, but in his neighbor.

ALWAYS BUSY

WHY Because we do better repairing than some others do; the public show their appreciation of this fact by keeping us busy.

SCHNEIDER'S
Jeweller & Optician
301 George Street, Peterborough
Issuer of Marriage Licenses

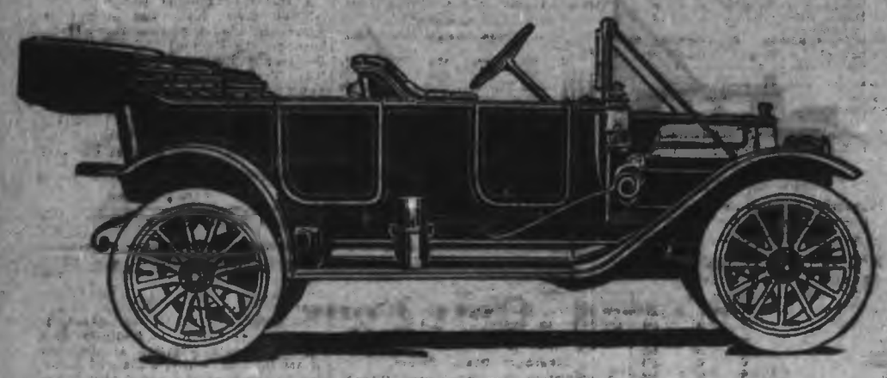
We feel that an explanation is due for the lateness of this announcement. It is some weeks overdue and it is pretty generally known that we have already delivered some of the 1912 models.

Here are the facts: Some weeks ago we advised our dealers that we were going to put out the largest automobile advertisement ever printed. We naturally expected an enthusiastic response in the next mail. Instead came scores of telegrams in this vein: "For goodness sake, don't you fellows at the factory ever consider the poor dealer and his troubles? You know we can't get enough 20's or 30's to supply our trade; there are three customers waiting for every car that comes from the factory. Why aggravate the present situation by publishing another ad. at this time?"

So we have violated all rules, and proceeded to deliver the 1912 models without first announcing them. And now we publish only one page instead of two—just enough to advise you of the fact and yet keep our dealers in good humour.

More Value for Less Money

That, in a sentence, epitomizes our 1912 announcement of E-M-F "30" and Flanders "20" cars



E-M-F "30" Fore-Door Touring Car, $1,400

Mohair Top, Brass Bound Windshield and Speedometer, $110 extra

OWING TO INCREASED FACTORY FACILITIES—which will enable our plants to build 50,000 automobiles in 1912—20,000 E-M-F "30's" and 30,000 Flanders "20's"—we are able to announce that not only we hope to more nearly meet the tremendous demand for this sterling product but also, that because of the increased output and the economies we are able to effect in manufacutre, we can give the buyer the coming season actually better value than formerly and at $50 less price in case of both E-M-F "30" and Flanders "20."

"THE WORLD DO MOVE," said Galileo with his last gasp—and that is our only excuse for announcing any changes—note we do not say improvements—in either of our models for 1912.

JUST AT THIS TIME when other makers are tearing the air with declamations of their new and radically different models—condemning their product of the past by just so much as they proclaim the superiority of their forthcoming effort, we can say: "Our 1912 model is just as good as we sold in 1911—or 1910, 1909 or 1908."

CAN YOU APPRECIATE with what pride we make that statement—can you enjoy with us the exultation which comes from knowing that in the face we can only give every buyer as great value for his dollar—as much satisfaction and pleasure in his purchase as in the past—we will have achieved the highest ambition of an honest business house.

TAKE FOR EXAMPLE our E-M-F "30" model. Never was there such a record of service and of satisfaction as the car has given its 30,000 owners. So flawless has been that record, we have to-day 30,000 salesmen—all working for love.

DO YOU KNOW THAT E-M-F "30" is the oldest car in the world in its present form—this is its fourth year—and the few changes that have been made from time to time were in external appearances only—we have kept up with the styles in body design.

NO OTHER POWER PLANT has ever been able to equal this in performance—"Old Bullet," the ninth car we built, holds several world's records for speed—84 miles an hour on Atlanta Speedway, and she and the others of that famous first litter hold all world's records for endurance. Every one of them are in service to-day and many of the first five hundred have over 100,000 miles of rough roads toured to their credit.

THAT IS WHY WE HESITATE to claim any real improvement in our 1912 models—persons who know will doubt our ability to improve on perfection—or what they consider the nearest approach to perfection that has ever been attained in a motor car.

BUT WE HAVE MADE A FEW minor changes that may rightfully be called improvements. Here are some you will agree are better: Longer wheel base—now 112 inches permitting of lengthened body, giving more room in front as well as rear seat. Body is also several inches wider, making ample room for three 200-pounders in car seat; drop frame instead of former straight frame, gives lower center of gravity and lower, more rakish appearance to car. Springs are longer also—both front and rear—always the easiest riding car, it is still more velvety in motion.

A FEW MECHANICAL CHANGES—not necessarily improvements, though of course our engineers think they are—are improved steering gear—better facilities for oiling and adjusting. At the same time we have emulated the $5,000 cars by placing spark and throttle levers on top of steering wheel; large steering wheel of Circassian Walnut, giving classy appearance and makes "thumb and finger control" possible.

NO CHANGE IN MOTOR—you will be pleased to hear that. Fact is we would not dare to make the slightest change in that wonderful motor for fear we could never again get quite as powerful a one.

NEITHER HAS THERE BEEN any change in transmission, control, axle or chassis detail, save only those mentioned the drop frame and longer springs.

E-M-F "30" IS MORE BEAUTIFUL though, than ever before. Truth to tell, we have always thought there was room for improvement in the outward appearance of this car. But you must remember that in order to give our customers the highest degree of mechanical excellence, in past years we had to design the body severely plain. And we are proud of that policy. other makers adopted the opposite policy, made cars that mislead buyers by their looks—and are now either in the junk heap or on the way there—expensive scrap.

BUT NOW IT IS DIFFERENT—we have our mammoth plants and they are paid for. We have a more perfect organization. Practically unlimited capital enables us to buy better—and prices of all materials are lower.

SO NOW WE CAN ADD appearance to efficiency—luxurious appointments to mechanical perfection—and sell you that much better car in 1912 for a lower price than you paid in 1911—and $100 less than we had to charge in 1910.

WE HAVE PROMISED FROM THE FIRST to improve wherever and whenever possible and to "divide with the buyer the savings we effect by our superior facilities." This 1912 announcement is the fulfillment of that promise.

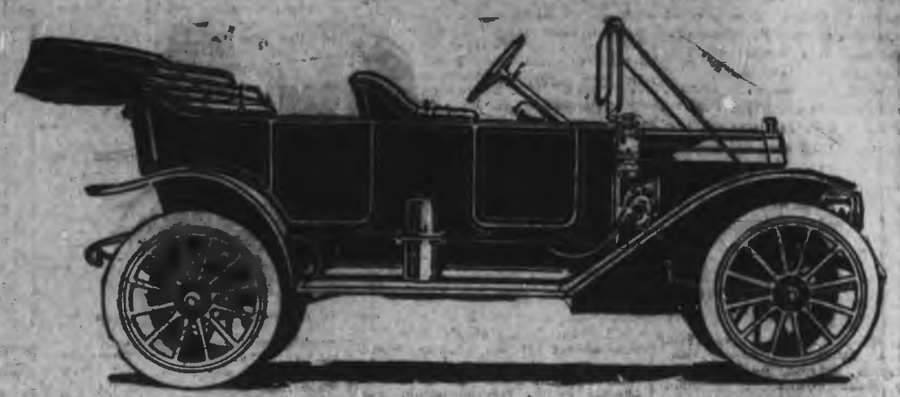
FOR THE PRICE HAS BEEN LOWERED—the big, luxurious, fore-door model will now be $1400 f.o.b. factory. Let those try who may, none can equal this value. They never have been able to, and it is no part of our plan that they ever shall.

THE BODY IS A BEAUTY—of the most improved "straight line" type—perfectly straight from front to rear. All levers inside; door latches concealed; large ventilators in dash so it is just as cool in front as in rear. Also we provide so doors can stand ajar, so speed of car sucks out warm air, permitting cool air to replace it constantly. Actual thermometer tests show our front compartment to be cooler than rear. Only objection to fore-door design eliminated.

IN A WORD the E-M-F "30" will continue to be in 1912, as it always has been, the best car in the world at less than $2500—the first choice in its class of all well informed buyers. Others thrive on our leavings—they live because we cannot supply the full demand, even making as we do, one hundred of these cars every day.

AND THE PRICE IS LESS—$50 less. Price of 1911 model (fore door touring car) was $1450. For 1912 it is $1400 flat—this is in pursuance of the policy we have enunciated from time to time ever since we started in business, that, "we will divide with the buyer the savings we are able to effect by our superior facilities for manufacturing and distributing our product to the buyer." It is not a cut—nor is it necessary. All the world knows it has been almost impossible to get E-M-F "30" or Flanders' "20" cars during the past few months, despite the fact we are the largest manufacturers in the world. No, this reduction in price is simply another evidence that we keep our promises—as we progress and improve facilities for making a better car for less, we divide with the buyer.

MADE IN FOUR MODELS for 1912: Fore door, Five-passenger Touring car, $1400; Fore-door Detachable, Demi-tonneau, $1400; Fore-door Roadster, $1400; Coupe, $1800. Full detailed specifications in handsome catalogue.



Flanders "20" Fore-Door Touring Car, $1,000

Mohair Top, Brass Bound Windshield and Speedometer, $110 extra

OF THE THREE SPEED FLANDERS "20" we need only say the 1912 model is identical with that of 1911—just as good in every particular. No better—for we don't know how to make a better car than our 1911 Flanders model proved. From the day we turned out the first three-speed Flanders "20" model this car has been the sensation of the motoring world in the light car class.

YOU WILL REMEMBER that the two-speed Flanders model did not come up to her designer's expectations. Ninety-five per cent of those who got them are perfectly satisfied—but we were not. We said so frankly a year ago when we announced the three-speed model, greatly improved throughout.

WE USE STRONG STATEMENTS in our ads—we have the goods and ordinary terms cannot do justice to them. So do others deal in superlatives when they are proclaiming hoped-for virtues. Past errors they are singularly silent about, however.

WE HAD TO ADMIT that the two-speed idea was wrong in a touring car. Its only advantage was cheapness of manufacture, and, while we had the customer's interest at heart when we designed the two-speed Flanders "20," we found we were mistaken and that the customer experienced buyers anyway—would gladly pay a trifle more to have the added efficiency and superior control of a three-speed selective sliding gear transmission.

WHILE WE WERE ABOUT IT, we designed the handsomest fore-door touring body that ever was seen on a moderate-priced car.

AND WHAT A RECORD she has made—it is simply splendid. Discredited by her past, dealers and individual buyers alike were supercritical. Competitors "knocked" for fair and tried to convince buyers that the three-speed model was really no great improvement over the former two-speed. We sometimes think this very knocking was our greatest advertisement, for of course, the public knew that the man whose name this car bore would stand back of the product—it had been his pride from the first.

SO THEY DETERMINED TO TRY the new car out. And they certainly did figure out some gruelling tests—speed, hill-climbing, mud plugging, sand fighting—every imaginable stunt that could break down a car or prove her ability. And Flanders "20" always came up smiling. The astonishment of her opponents was something to see. From that time she has forged steadily ahead, sweeping from her path every would-be rival, till to-day she is acknowledged leader. Dealers tell us there would be no other light touring car sold if they could get enough three-speed Flanders to fill the demand.

WE HAD IN MIND in designing this car, the great class of well-to-do business men who want a family touring car of high efficiency, seating five and capable of taking them anywhere—people who want a car of sterling quality and yet feel they cannot afford a car as large as E-M-F "30."

NOW WE COULD HAVE DONE as we did with E-M-F "30" five years ago—designed with an eye single to mechanical excellence and without regard to appearance. But that day has passed. The opinions of other makers to the contrary notwithstanding, we believe the farmer and the man in the village has just as artistic a sense—is just as well informed on up-to-date design as the city man. And we determined to make a handsome car as well as a good one.

THAT COSTS MORE, OF COURSE—there is actually over $520 more factory cost in Flanders "20" than in any of its competitors—yet there is not nearly that difference in the selling price.

COMPARE THEM—Ask your local dealer to drive his Flanders "20" demonstrator up beside one of the several makes of "tin cars" so you can see the wonderful difference.

COMPARE POINT FOR POINT—the French-type bonnet of the Flanders with the simple, cheap-looking and cheap—motor cover on the front of the other. The full fenders of the Flanders with the scrawny, tinny-looking mud-guards of cars that presume to compete with it. Even the equipment, lamps, top, wind-shield, are superior in looks and in quality.

APPEARANCE IS IMPORTANT—However matter-of-fact a man may claim to be, his wife and daughters crave the artistic and the beautiful. And Flanders "20" is their choice because there they find it to as great a degree as in the highest priced car on the market.

YOUR MECHANICAL SENSE will also be appeased we are talking to you, Mr. Practical Man—if you will investigate chassis details and power plant. You will find a four-cylinder motor of most approved French type and a transmission like that in E-M-F "30"—same excellent axle design too, and you will find, if you know steel, that the materials that go into this car are not surpassed in quality by that used in any automobile at any price—bar none.

FLANDERS "20" HAS NO RIVAL when you consider all points. No other car on the market gives the buyer so much mechanical excellence and so much to be proud of in appearance as the Flanders "20" at $1000.

OUR ONLY PROBLEM IS DELIVERY—We are not going to make any rash promises. We cannot promise to deliver every car that is ordered. All we can do is to repeat that we are making one hundred per day now! That we are doubling our factory facilities as fast as bricks can be laid and machinery installed! That we will be making two hundred a day within ninety days, and will work a full force all winter in hopes of catching up with the demand—but that is the limit of our ability for the present.

SAME REDUCTION IN PRICE of this model as E-M-F "30"—$50 less for 1912 than for 1911 model. And same reason—increased facilities; increased output which distributed the "overhead" expense thinner over a larger number of cars, and enables us to effect other economies in manufacture. Also in selling—we verily believe it costs less to transfer an E-M-F "30" or Flanders "20" from factory to user than any other motor car made. Reason is we don't have to sell them—customers come to us and buy, having found from other owners that nowhere else can such value, such service, such satisfaction be obtained in an automobile for anywhere near the price. Costs less to sell and to make, and so, in pursuance of the policy outlined at the foot of second column of this ad. (applies to Flanders as well as E-M-F "30") we divide with the buyer the savings we effect.

FOUR MODELS OF THIS CAR ALSO FOR 1912.—Fore-door, Five-passenger Touring Car—slightly smaller than E-M-F "30," not quite so speedy—45 miles an hour—but just as efficient, $1000. Four passenger Suburban—ideal car for rural residents—$1000. Two-passenger Roadster, $950. Two-passenger Coupe, $1200. Full detailed specifications in catalogue.

TWO SCORE KILLED

Passenger Train No. 4 Trying to Make Up Time on Her Trip Eastward Strikes a Spread Rail and Is Thrown on Masonry Forty Feet Below — Ontario Man Killed and Torontonians Are Hurt.

Manchester, N.Y., Aug. 26.—Speeding eastward behind time, Lehigh Valley passenger train No. 4 ran into a spread rail on a trestle near here yesterday and two day coaches from the mid-section of the train plunged downward forty feet, striking the east embankment like a pair of projectiles. In the awful plunge and crash at least sixty-seven persons are believed to have been killed and more than sixty injured. The injuries of several are so serious that it is feared they will die.

The following bodies were sent to Shortsville from Manchester in charge of Coroner Stoddard: Mrs. A. Zubeck, Buffalo; O. C. Madden, Trenton, N.J.; Wm. C. S. Johnson, Cleveland, Ohio; Chas. Hicks, Newark, N.J.; R. S. Uncle and Mrs. R. S. Uncle, Southfield, N.J.; L. M. Hunsicker, Vineland, Ont.; ... Vaughan, veteran, Brooklyn; Jos. Bailey, Helen Pownall, C. P. Johnson, addresses unknown; nine unidentified women and one unidentified man.

Among the injured are Mr. and Mrs. F. P. Winterbury of Toronto, at the Rochester Hospital; H. E. Groston, 9 Chestnut street, Toronto, at the Rochester.

This week was the worst in the history of the Lehigh Valley line in this state and one of the most disastrous ever recorded on the system. Crowded with passengers, many of whom were war veterans and excursionists from the Grand Army of the Republic encampment at Rochester, train No. 4, made up of fourteen cars, drawn by two big mogul engines, was forty minutes late when it reached Rochester Junction, and from there sped eastward to make up time before reaching Geneva.

The engine and two day coaches had just passed the centre of a four-hundred-foot trestle over Canandaigua outlet, 120 yards east of the station at Manchester, at 12.38 o'clock, when the Pullman car Austin, the third car of a long train, left the rails. It dragged the dining car with it and five day coaches and two Pullmans, in this order, followed.

All bumped over the ties a short distance when the coupling between day coach No. 237 and the rear end of the diner broke. The forward end of the train dragged the derailed Pullman car Austin and the diner over safely, after which both plunged down the south embankment and rolled over. The free end of the ill-fated Lehigh Valley day coach, where most of the slaughter occurred, shoved out over the gulf and, followed by a Grand Trunk day coach, stripped the rear guard off the south side of the trestle and plunged to the shallow river bed more than forty feet below.

The end of the first day coach that went over struck the east embankment of solid masonry and, with the other sixty-foot cars behind it, both shot against the wall with terrific force.

Both cars were filled with humanity as the plunge was made, and in a few minutes the cars lay, a mass of crumbled wood, metal and glass under which a hundred men, women and children, many of whom were killed instantly, were buried. The most destruction occurred in the day coach No. 237, and a dozen persons were later taken dead from the second day coach, which, having followed the first over the trestle, snapped its rear coupling and thus saved the rest of the train from being dragged over.

This second day coach struck on the bottom and stood up, the rear end projecting a few feet above the top of the trestle. All of the passengers in this car were piled in a tangled mass of broken seats at the bottom of the car.

Indescribable pandemonium followed. The Pullman car, Emelyn, which remained on the bridge, with one end projecting over the gulch, and several cars behind it, derailed, and in immediate danger of going over on the mass of wreckage below, were soon emptied of all their passengers, and these, aided by gangs of railroad employes from the big freight yards at Manchester, rushed to aid. As the moans of the injured and dying were heard below, all possible speed was made, but it was several minutes before anybody reached the cars at the bottom to effect rescues.

The cars did not catch fire. Axes were secured and body after body was removed and carried by the rescuers knee-deep in the river bed to the bank on the west side of the trestle. There the dead and injured were laid out on the damp ground, while planks and timber, taken from buildings in course of construction, were requisitioned and a field hospital was established.

It was more than an hour before many of the injured could be removed, and special trains from both Geneva and Rochester brought physicians, nurses and medical supplies. Hundreds awaited treatment, and the railroad station at Manchester, a cider mill and an ice house were used to give temporary shelter and treatment to the refugees.

It was necessary to chop through the sides and bottom of the day coach at the bottom and the work of removing the victims moved with painful slowness. Death had come swiftly to many, a large number of the dead having had their skulls crushed in when they were thrown with terrible velocity against the car seats and projections. The mortality was high among the older passengers, most of whom were battle-scarred veterans of the Civil War and their wives.

HAVE A BUSY DAY

Mr. Borden Sees Utter Ruination For the Home Market, According to His Speeches in Northumberland and Hastings Counties — Holds a Rally at Campbellford at Night—Spoke at Warkworth.

Campbellford, Aug. 25.—The east riding of Northumberland County was well canvassed by R. L. Borden and his association yesterday, the Conservative leader making in all five speeches. Leaving Peterboro at an early hour, Mr. Borden arrived at Hastings and made two speeches before 10.30 o'clock. Motoring thence to Warkworth, Mr. Borden met 1,500 people on the fair grounds in the afternoon. To Campbellford he then proceeded and as the procession of motors approached the outskirts of the town, a band suddenly appeared and led the Conservative leader to the centre of the place, while the shrill whistles of every industry proclaimed his arrival.

Mr. Borden addressed himself particularly to the effect of reciprocity to the farmers and the home market. Cheese, which is a staple product of this section of the country would at once lose its identity, he said. The resulting competition with all nations affected by the favored nation treaties would place the Canadian market for beef at the mercy of Argentine. By reason of the low cost of ocean carriage the competition was vital and threatening. "The one avenue of escape, which is open to you people of Canada," said Mr. Borden, "will be the 21st day of September next, when you cast your ballot. The traditions of the past and the hopes of the future call upon you to be on your guard at this crisis in your nation's history."

At Warkworth, Mr. Borden replied to a statement that if elected the Conservatives would suspend the public works now going on in the riding.

"There is absolutely no truth in the assertion," Mr. Borden declared vehemently. While not parsimonious in public affairs the Conservative leader said that every dollar should be spent in the interest of the people and a dollar's value given in return. He made the statement that $10,000,000 of the people's money had been wasted by the Liberal Government every year in useless expenditures.

The evening meeting at Campbellford was something of a surprise. Accommodation for a limited number had been provided in the opera house, but the crowd swelled to such an extent that arrangements had to be made for an open air meeting. Willing hands made quick work of the change, and in a few minutes 1,500 people had gathered around.

LEVEL CROSSING AGAIN.

Nathan Overbolt of Waterford Killed by G.T.R. Express.

Grimsby, Aug. 26.—The dreaded level crossing claimed another victim in this section when Nathan Overbolt, a highly-esteemed and respected citizen of Waterford lost his life by being struck by a westbound express at the G.T.R. crossing at Grimsby Beach at 10.45 yesterday morning. Mr. Overbolt had just arrived from Waterford and had left his wife and grips at Frank Reese's store while he went to look up a boarding-house, where he and his wife could stay a couple of weeks in this district. He had made arrangements for board and rooms and was returning to the store to get his wife and grips when the accident happened. As he reached the tracks a freight train going east on the right hand track was passing, and he stood on the westbound track watching it pass. No. 9, one of the G.T.R.'s fastest trains, was running twenty minutes late and reached this crossing as the freight was going east. The engineer saw Overbolt on the track and whistled almost continuously for him to get out of the way, but he apparently did not hear the train, and before the engineer could stop it he was struck and thrown about 100 feet upon the station platform. The body was terribly smashed about the head and all down the left side; the skull was crushed in and the left side of the face all smashed, the left arm broken and left leg broken in two places.

Canadian Batteries Do Well.

Salisbury Plain, Aug. 26.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—Almost ideal weather prevailed for the second day's artillery competitions, and substantial progress resulted in six out of eleven field batteries, including the Canadians, completing outright their respective series.

While it is difficult to forecast with any degree of accuracy the merits of the contestants, the Canadians, in the opinion of reliable observers, will be found to have cut quite a respectable figure, more especially in the matter of selection of gun position, accuracy of laying outlines of fire, and adherence to rules of ranging. Their work has been watched with the keenest interest by our officers and the inspectors-general of horse and field artillery, the latter of whom remained throughout the contest. They found the range speedily and accurately, greatly improving on Thursday, when a sultry sky and heavy rainfall compelled them repeatedly to cease firing. The results will be declared today.

Hotelmen Paid Fines.

Lindsay, Aug. 26.—W. C. Graham, proprietor of the temperance house at Manilla, was fined $20 and costs for keeping liquor for sale, on a charge laid by License Inspector Thornbury.

James Thompson, proprietor of the Rockland House Bobcaygeon, was charged with selling intoxicating liquor without a license, the charge being laid by License Inspector Lithgow. Two Dominion detectives were working on the latter case and secured the evidence. The accused pleaded guilty and was fined $100 and costs.

VISIT TO FARNHAM

Hon. Sydney Fisher So Describes the Former Minister of the Interior—Meeting Is First English One During the Week—Premier Laughs at the Annexation Bogey—Insult to Canadian Manhood.

Farnham, Que., Aug. 26.—For the first time this week Sir Wilfrid Laurier addressed an English-speaking audience. It was in the old town of Farnham yesterday, with the charred and devastated area of the recent fire stretching in gloomy perspective. The Premier covered ground largely familiar in his address, but laid special emphasis on the ridiculous statements that reciprocity would bring ultimate annexation. These he denounced as insults to Canadian manhood. He said it would break his heart to have the reciprocity convention rejected by the Canadian people.

Hon. Sydney Fisher, Minister of Agriculture, made an address of unusual power, calling Mr. Sifton a timorous coward for his fears that reciprocity would lead to annexation.

About 5,000 persons attended the meeting, and acclaimed the Premier loudly. That many Conservatives were present was evidenced by numerous mild attempts at heckling.

Mr. F. W. Kay, the Liberal standard-bearer in Missisquoi, and Mr. G. H. Bolvin, candidate in Shefford, both young men, were well received.

Hon. Sydney Fisher made a strong plea for reciprocity. If Great Britain was Canada's best market, why, asked the Minister, has Canada exported seven times the value of horses and a hundred times the value of sheep to the United States above the value shipped to England? The comparative prices of hogs in Toronto and Chicago were $8.63 and $9.11 respectively, showing the better market to the south.

Sir Wilfrid received an ovation.

"I have my revenge in seeing Mr. Bourassa flanked on one side by Mr. Sifton, whom he detests, but to complete matters, flanked by Joe Martin on the other side. If there is a man he hates more than Sifton, it is Joe Martin," said the Premier in the course of his address.

"The cry of annexation is simply rant and nonsense," he said. "Look at this manifesto of the Toronto Board of Trade, putting people on their guard against reciprocity, stating that after a few years of reciprocity Canada would be too much involved to withdraw from it. It is as sensible for some wiseacres to say to a man going into business. Don't put your money in; conditions may change five years hence; look for another market."

Ottawa Meetings.

Ottawa, Aug. 26.—Arrangements were completed yesterday for the holding of the first large anti-reciprocity meeting in Ottawa. It takes place on Sept. 5 in the Russell Theatre, with Hon. Clifton Sifton as the chief speaker. Other meetings are also being arranged for, to be addressed by leading Ontario Conservatives. Word was also received yesterday that Sir Wilfrid Laurier would come to Ottawa for a meeting in the Arena late in the campaign, probably on Sept. 15. On the afternoon of that day he speaks in Russell for Hon. Charles Murphy.

Set Fire to Barn.

Kingson, Aug. 26.—A little boy with a cigarette came very near being the cause of a serious fire on Wolfe Island yesterday afternoon. He had been smoking and threw the butt of his cigarette in a hay stack at the farm of Oliver Hawkins. The stack, which was destroyed, set fire to the barn, and neighboring farmers had a hard time in saving it.

Across America Flight.

Nyack, N.Y., Aug. 26.—Atwood, the aviator, yesterday said:—"My next move will be to try for the Hearst $50,000 prize for the flight from coast to coast. I shall try that flight some time before October 1st. It is my intention to use a brand new Wright-Burgess aeroplane, of the same type as the one in which I flew from St. Louis. I expect to travel from coast to coast in that one car. My plan is to go to the Pacific coast within a short time with the machine. I shall start from San Francisco, fly to Los Angeles, and then follow the Southern Pacific line into Texas. From Texas I shall work my way up to St. Louis, Cincinnati and Dayton, and thence to Syracuse, from which place I'll follow the same route as on this trip."

Mimico Brakeman Killed.

St. Catharines, Ont., Aug. 26.—B. New, a brakeman on a Grand Trunk freight train, was killed at Merriton yesterday morning by falling off his train. His home is in Mimico.

Dr. Jory, coroner, is investigating, and an inquest will probably be held. The body was brought to a local undertaker's.

At the G.T.R. Mimico yard office it is believed that the victim of the accident was A. H. New, who entered the service about six months ago. He was about 23 year sof age, and boarded in Mimico.

Electrocution at St. Kitts.

St. Catharines, Aug. 26.—William Mieson, an employe of the Jenokes Machine Co., was yesterday electrocuted at the works. He was carrying an electric lamp and in some way touched a live wire. He was 28 years of age, married and leaves one child. He was an Englishman and came here recently.

Bush Fires at Stony Lake.

Peterboro, Aug. 26.—Bush fires took near Stony Lake lately have been serious. Some of the visitors and cottagers have had to do some pretty hard fire-fighting. The hotel on the south shore of the lake was only saved by very hard work, and the danger is not wholly past.

STOLE FOR CHARITY.

New York Bookkeeper Gets a Month For Generosity.

New York, Aug. 26.—The story of a bookkeeper who embezzled $6,000 of his employer's money in four years' time, only to give almost all of it to charity, was made known in general sessions, when Richard Pachars, 28 years old, was brought before Judge Swann for sentence.

From the testimony of the bookkeeper himself, it appeared that he was possessed of a keen desire to gain social distinction. One of the members of the firm told the court that Pachars had used almost every cent of the embezzled money in giving picnics and outings to the children and old folks of the Oddfellows' Home and Orphan Asylum at Mamaroneck, of which he was a director. Many times he had paid for high-priced specialists for surgical operations for members of the institution.

It was stated that friends had partly made restitution, and that the firm would take Pachars back, knowing that he would make good the balance. The firm asked for suspended sentence.

"I've been a fool, judge," said Pachars, as tears streamed down his face, "and now when it's too late I realize it."

He was given a month in the Tombs to repent.

BRIEFS FROM THE WIRES.

Nathan Overholt was killed by a train at Grimsby Beach.

The last census returns give Greater London a population of 7,252,983.

The G.T.R. car shops and storehouse at Palmerston were burned. Loss $7,000.

When an elevator collapsed and fell five storeys at E. Chown & Co.'s wholesale hardware store, Kingston, Jimmy Atkins, a youth, had a miraculous escape from being crushed to death.

A sneak climbed through a window from the roof of Crawford's broom factory, Kingston, took a hinge off the office door, and made off with $17, which had been left in a tin box.

Antil Lentos, a Finlander, committed suicide in his home in Cobalt. His wife died very suddenly about noon and grief over her death caused him to suicide an hour later.

Ald. Alfred Maguire will be the Liberal candidate in Centre Toronto. A meeting of the executive of the riding's Liberal Association was held in the Reform headquarters last night, and as he was their unanimous choice.

Rumor Says Murder.

New Hamburg, Aug. 26.—A young man aged 20 years, named Robert Spahr, son of John Spahr, of Northeast Hope, was found dead upon the Grand Trunk Railway tracks about a mile west of New Hamburg about two o'clock yesterday morning. The deceased, who worked at home on the farm, attended Barnum and Bailey's circus at Berlin on Thursday. It is supposed that he returned on the G.T.R. flyer, which reached here about 10 p.m., and was walking home upon the tracks, or that he was killed jumping from the train opposite his home. His body was found about 2 a.m. by the crew of the way freight, whose train ran over the body. The engineer says that it was lying across the tracks, the head on one rail and the feet on the other. Coroner Marty of this place will hold an inquest.

There are rumors that foul play is connected with the case.

Extra Prizes For Riflemen.

Ottawa, Aug. 26.—Mrs. E. C. Whitney of Ottawa has made a grant of $100 a year for ten years to the Dominion Rifle Association to be devoted to extra prizes for cadets in the Grand Aggregate. The generous gift came quite unexpectedly to the D.R.A. officials yesterday. The grant will be made in a lump sum sufficient to form an annuity of $100 a year.

On various occasions Earl Grey has regretted that more of the wealthy people of Canada did not take an interest in assisting the rifle-shooting of this country which, he said, "formed the backbone of the defence of the nation."

In the Governor-General's, the first 150 get into the last stage. Possible, 105.

The D.R.A. silver medal was won by Captain C. R. Crowe, 30th Regt., 98.

Lucky Collapse of Rink.

Toronto, Aug. 26.—So rotted were the girders at the Mutual street rink which collapsed two days ago, injuring two workmen, that it is a great wonder that a catastrophe did not occur during some hockey match, when there were 2,500 to 3,000 people resting their weight upon the decaying timbers. Why it did not crumble under the heavy pressure of one of the immense crowds that often thronged its galleries is beyond explanation and nothing short of a miracle.

It appears that none of the supports had been taken away at the time the building collapsed, but that some of the roof had been removed, lessening the pressure on the wall, which gave way.

Had the rink been allowed to remain as it was and used again this coming winter, a calamity would undoubtedly have occurred.

C.P.R. Absorbs Quebec Central.

Toronto, Aug. 26.—A controlling interest in the Quebec Central Railway has been provisionally secured by the Canadian Pacific Railway. The former's policy will not be affected by the change, although extensive additions to its lines are contemplated. The agreement between the two roads is subject to the ratification of the Quebec Central's security-holders.

The C.P.R.'s earnings for the week ended Aug. 21 show a considerable increase over the traffic earnings of the same period last year. This year they are $2,267,000, against $1,897,000 in 1910.

Sir Thomas Shaughnessy is now on his annual tour of the C.P.R. system.

Hold Up by Labor Troubles.

Kingston, Aug. 26.—Monday next the recruit class will report at the Royal Military College. Fifty-five passed the entrance examinations, but only forty can be accommodated. The college will have to worry along for another year minus dormitory space. It was the intention of the Department of Public Works to do the work necessary, but it was held up, owing to labor troubles here for two months.

Bad G.T.R. Freight Wreck.

Guelph, Aug. 26.—Word reached here yesterday of the destruction by fire early yesterday of the Grand Trunk car shop and road department storehouse at Palmerston. The loss will be $7,000.

The G.T.R. freight train about 7.45 yesterday morning ran off the track at Alma, and has delayed traffic so that trains are stopped running north and south. Seven cars are derailed and piled up on the right of way. Two were loaded with cattle, one with horses, two with cement and two with piledriving apparatus. Several of the live stock are reported to have been killed and others badly injured.

World's Largest Steamship.

London, Aug 26.—The new Hamburg-American liner, which is being built in Stettin for trans-Atlantic service, is to be named the Imperator. She will be larger than any craft yet afloat.

The huge vessel appears something like the skeleton of an eleven storey skyscraper in course of construction or she stands fully a hundred feet high, is nearly ninety feet in beam and has a length of 710 feet.

The Imperator's displacement will be 50,000 tons and she will provide accommodation for 5,000 passengers of all classes.

Around the World in 43 Days.

New York, Aug. 26.—A Paris cable says: Andre Jaberschmidt, the journalist, will soon finish his tour of the world in record time. The Olympic, on which the lightning globe trotter sailed from New York last Saturday, reached Cherbourg last night. A racing automobile will be in waiting to carry him to Paris in the fastest possible time, and it is hoped he will arrive here at five o'clock this morning.

If all goes well, he will have made the round the world trip in a few hours under forty days.

Customs Increase Overstated.

Toronto, Aug. 26.—"The reporter must have been indulging in a pipe dream," remarked J. H. Bertram, collector of customs, in reference to the statement in an evening paper to the effect that the customs revenue for the first 24 days in August had increased over half a million over the same period in 1910.

"The figures for 24 days in last August were $1,036,627, and this year's is $1,620,440, thus showing an increase of $564,022," states the article in question.

"I gave out no information or figures whatever," Mr. Bertram declared. "As a matter of fact the increase is not above $100,000."

Connaught to Tour U.S.

London, Aug. 26.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—The Birmingham Post's London correspondent says the Duke of Connaught is likely to pay an official visit to the United States, which is wished by both the American and Canadian Governments. It is to be limited to Washington, but will include several great industrial centres. The visit will probably take place next February.

Empress Still Delayed.

London, Aug. 26.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—The Empress of Britain is expected to sail on Sunday or Monday. The Virginian sailed yesterday.

The C.A.P. correspondent at Liverpool wires that the position there is no better than Thursday and the companies can't get crews at present, consequently any sailing arrangements are entirely speculative.

Reciprocity With Indies.

London, Aug. 26. Algernon Aspinall, secretary of the West Indian Committee, proposes shortly visiting Canadian cities, with a view to furthering reciprocity with the West Indian Islands. It is hoped that after the elections, the Canadian Manufacturers' Association will summon a conference anent this.

Suicides on Brother's Grave.

Niagara Falls, N.Y., Aug. 26.—While passing through St. Mary's cemetery about 6.30 yesterday morning, a workman discovered the body of Thomas Roche, a bartender of this city, lying dead on the grave of his brother, who was buried there recently. A revolver was on the ground nearby.

MARKET REPORTS.

Liverpool Wheat Futures Close Lower, Chicago Higher—Live Stock —Latest Quotations.

LIVERPOOL, Aug. 26.—The market opened heavy, ½d to ¾d decline, and following the opening further declined. Advices from Russia were bullish, with rains in the southwest further delaying harvesting and speculations are for light Russian shipments this week, and prospects for a small Russian movement from the new crop. Argentine and Australian offerings are firmly held, and the political situation is again causing some apprehension. Pressure in the face of these bullish influences was attributed wholly to the fact that the strike at Liverpool is ended, releasing stocks at the quays.

CHICAGO, Aug. 26.—Dread of frost damaging wheat in the Canadian Northwest to-night brought about a rally to-day in the market here. Closing prices were at a net advance of a shade to 1¼c. Corn and oats finished within a sixteenth of last night's level.

Montreal Grain and Produce.

MONTREAL, Aug. 26.—There was an increased enquiry from European sources for Manitoba new crop spring wheat and old crop oats, but as the prices bid are still out of line with values here, no new business is being done. Local prices for oats are firm, and the demand is fair. A sale of 75,000 bushels of American No. 3 mixed corn was made at 84½c per bushel over the Chicago September option, c.i.f. Kingston. A more active trade was done in spring wheat flour for export demand. Sales of over 10,000 sacks were made. The demand for bran and shorts is good.

Owing to the increased demand for eggs prices have scored a sharp advance. Butter is active and strong under a good demand for export account, and prices have advanced. Cheese is also strong and higher in sympathy with the higher prices paid in the country.

SMALL AND JOLLY.

Tiffed Guests Draw Beer From Keg and Smoked Clay Pipes.

Tired of primping and posing and preening, wearied of its maudlin meanderings, society seems to be returning to primeval ways of seeking mere pleasure, without which its course would be indeed barren. Having run the gamut of monkey dinners and being surfeited with wanton display, what could be more attractive than to return to the mannerisms of primitive society? Having gone the limit in their reward course, why not frolic back to earth like any old skyrocket? Sure enough!

Whether through necessity or from a lack of sense still never be known, but one of the quietest society functions of the exposition season was given by Sir Harry Jones, the painter, and Sir Richard and Lady Muriel Paget at the Sir Harry Jones residence, ... which ... rendered for the ... at a studio in the Quartier Latin. The affair was styled "small and jolly," and was intended to be a Bohemian contrast to the usual society parties. All the chairs were removed and there were no floral decorations.

Really, it was amusing! Formal receptions were dispensed with and the guests huddled on the floor on rugs, on the staircases or in the back garden, the men smoking clay pipes and the women cigarettes if they wished. If they wanted refreshments they had to help themselves from a big cask of lager beer which stood in the corner of the room trestled with greens. It was a free and easy affair, all quaffing beer and joining in the chorus of the Drinking Song.

The supper, somewhat inconsistently, was one of epicurean delicacy, but it was served on the floor or the stairs, or wherever there was room to put a plate.

A very distinguished company, who left all their tiaras and crowns at home, included the Duchess of Marlborough, the Duchess of Somerset, the Duchess of Rutland, Lady Betty Balfour, Miss Violent Asquith, Mrs. Ava Aster the Duke of Somerset, Lord and Lady Dreghede, Lady Elcho, Sir Edward Poynter, Mrs. Jack Leslie, Miss Maxine Elliott and Mlle. Genee.

Yes, it must have been small, and no doubt it was jolly.

When Voters Smiled.

Surprising as the revelations have been which were made in some of the recent election petitions, they cease-ly compare with the old days before such a keen eye was kept on the financial disbursements of those who sought Parliamentary honors.

So long ago as 1808, for example, cabbages were sold at Sudbury during the general election at the rate of $50 for four, whilst a plate of gooseberries, such as one could buy newadays for a penny, were sold for $120, the vendors, of course, being voters. And at Great Marlow an elector was given the hint that he could buy a sow and nine young pigs for a penny. He bought them, too.

A quarter of a century later things had not improved, for we find that a voter would be ushered into the presence of a certain agent, by whom he would be asked. "Well, how do you do to-day?" at the same time holding up three fingers to signify that he was to receive $15. If the elector were dissatisfied, he would reply that he was not very well, and promptly up would go the agent's fingers, showing that he was to receive $25. And while he looked out of the window the money would be placed on the table, and he would turn and pick it up and then take his departure.

The Belper Family.

Lord Belper, of Kingston Hall, Derby, England, has completed his seventy-first year. His lordship was formerly captain of the Honorable Corps of Gentlemen-at-Arms, and also commanded the South Notts Hussars. He is now honorary colonel of the latter regiment, and an aide-de-camp for yeomanry to the King. The heir to the barony is his lordship's only surviving son, the Hon. Algernon Strutt, captain 2nd Life Guards.

There has been a good deal of romance about the fortunes of the Belper family. The founder was a small farmer, who apprenticed his son to a wheelwright. The wheelwright's son, Jedediah Strutt, became a hosier first in a small, and then in a very large way, in which he was helped by his own inventive genius, which originated the famous machine for making ribbed stockings.

To him there came one day a man in humble life who had ideas on the subject of cotton spinning, and together they developed the spinning jenny, thenceforward to be associated for ever with the name of Richard Arkwright.

We take the opportunity of thanking our many customers whose preference has enabled us to make this department successful beyond our expectations, and recognize that they kindly put up with no little inconvenience during the very busy season and our temporary occupation of rooms outside the store.

Miss Kruger, our very efficient dressmaker will formerly open this department for the Autumn season when she will be ready and much pleased to interview customers and explain the New Fall Fashions in Tailored Suits, House, Street and Evening Gowns.

Friday, September 1st

ARE READY FOR EMERGENCIES

Examiner Special:

ALTONA, PRUSSIA, AUG. 26.—Emperor William to-night made a noteworthy speech in the course of a banquet in honour of the province of Schleswig-Holstein, whither he has come to attend the manoeuvres. Referring to the Empress as a daughter of the province, his Majesty declared: "She is an example for German mothers, because she has brought up six sons, serious, energetic men, who are not inclined to take advantage of the comforts and enjoyments of their rank and position, like many of the present-day youths, but have devoted their strength to the Fatherland in hard, and strict fulfillment of duty, and should a serious occasion arise are ready cheerfully to sacrifice their lives on the altar of their country."

Many of the newspapers are drawing the conclusion that Emperor William, in his speech, in referring to the patriotism of his sons, had in mind the dispute betwen Germany and France over Morocco.

HACKENSCHMIDT IS VERY SORE

CHICAGO, AUG. 26.—Plainly angered over the criticisms that he has been indifferent in training for his Labour Day match with Frank Gotch for the world's wrestling championship, Geo. Hackenschmidt to-day declared he intended to put in only two more days of heavy training before Labour Day.

"Two more days of hard mat work is all I am going to give myself before the Gotch match," he said. "In all my experience as a wrestler I have never failed to know what was expected of me, and I know when I am in condition and when I am stale.

"It makes me mad all over to have it said I do not realize the importance of this bout. Must I train like a novice to go on the mat with Gotch? Is no regard to be paid to the years of work I have done, getting ready for this go? If there is any man in this city who could put in the gruelling work I did in England before I came to Chicago, I should like to see him. I am perfectly satisfied that I will be all right when I go on the mat with Gotch."

GOOD FISHING AT JUBILEE

Many muskinonge and bass are being brought in daily. This year they are larger than usual.

The members of the Cannonball camp at present are Mr. Fred Allen, the director of the camp; Messrs. Runnels, Evans, Latimer, Dreyland-Meteheral and Regan. Reports from the camp are to the effect that they have lassoed about a dozen muskinonge and sixty bass.

STONEY LAKE SWEPT BY TERRIBLE WIND AND ELECTRICAL STORM

Gale of Cyclonic Proportions Caused a Large Amount of Minor Damage and Badly Frightened the Summer Colony.

TREES BLOWN DOWN

Special Staff Correspondence.

STONEY LAKE, AUG. 26.—The Stoney Lake colony had a good imitation of a cyclone yesterday afternoon. In fact it was so close to the real thing that there were a good many badly frightened people around the lake when the storm was at its height. Between five and six o'clock the lake was swept by a terrific electrical storm, accompanied by a wind of terrible intensity that was almost a cyclone. A fresh breeze had been blowing from the south-east for the greater part of the day, but as the thunderstorm broke the wind shifted to the north west and with the coming of the rain suddenly grew into a gale of awe-inspiring strength. In an instant the air seemed to be full of solid sheets of water, so that one could not distinguish objects fifty yards away. Trees bent almost double in the gale, branches, and even the big tops, in some cases, were snapped off like pipe-stems; the very cottages seemed to rock in the wind. Tents were blown down, flags torn into shreds, and verandah furniture was tossed around. For nearly ten minutes the gale continued at its height, while frightened people expected to see the roof lifted off their cottage at any moment.

Fortunately, the approach of the storm was slow and no one was caught on the lake when it broke in all its fury. In one cottage, that of Mr. Adam Patterson, of Norwood, the family were at supper during the storm, and the first wild blast lifted the cover from the table, smashing most of the dishes on the floor.

According to veteran cottagers the wind was the worst they have ever seen here. When the storm was over the lake was seen to be thickly dotted with branches, tree-tops, and leaves, a striking testimony to the power of the wind.

At Mt. Julian the wind tore the big launch house owned by Mr. Wm. Thompson, from its moorings, and the structure, with Mr. Thompson's launch, the Viking, inside, drifted off half way across the lake. As soon as the wind lulled, launches owned by Mr. Grahame at Viamede and Mr. Rich. Hall, went to the rescue and towed the boat-house safely back with no damage done. In many cases canoes and row boats which had been left turned over on docks, were picked up by the wind and tossed around, a number being badly smashed. At "Kilkenny" four canoes and two rowboats were blown off the dock.

It is reported that during the storm a lightning bolt struck a building on Tait's Island, setting it on fire. The blaze was extinguished, however, without much damage being done.

Several trees were blown down on Mr. Leah's island, and no doubt similar accidents occurred elsewhere on the lake.

The chief path of the storm was along the Burleigh shore and that part of Burleigh township lying north of the lake suffered severe damage. The cyclone swept the orchard on the property of Mr. I. Church near Mt. Julian almost out of existence, only two trees and those most unhappily, dead ones, being left standing. Rev. Mr. Lord, who drove down from Apsley to Mount Julian after the storm, reported that the road was almost impassable on account of the number of trees that had fallen across the driveway. No doubt the farmers in that neighbourhood have suffered severely, but as the telephone lines are in trouble, little information could be elicited.

The storm followed the lake and then swung to the south-east, Young's Point escaping everything but a few drops of rain, while Lakefield had no rain at all. No doubt this was the same storm that reached Ottawa later in the evening.

The annual meeting of the Upper Stoney Lake Campers' and Cottagers' Association was held on Friday night last in the pavilion at Crowe's Landing and was well attended. It was reported that the current year had been a successful one for the Association and that everything was in a flourishing condition. The following officers were elected:

President—A. B. Mitchell, Toronto.
Sec'y-Treas.—Rich. Lees, Peterborough.
Executive—John Davidson, Toronto, chairman. Dr. J. C. Rogers, New York. E. S. Simpson.

At a meeting of the directors on Saturday night, it was decided to build a launch wharf and the contract will be let at once, in order to have the wharf ready for next season. It is proposed to build a substantial dock one hundred feet in length for the benefit of launch owners by whom the accommodation thus provided will be thoroughly appreciated.

Water Very Low.

The water in Stoney Lake continues to drop daily and cottagers who have come here every year, say they do not remember seeing it so low. During the past week it has gone down nearly two feet and everywhere rocks that are usually well below the surface are seen projecting above the water. The steamboat men have troubles of their own these days with many wharves high and dry out of the water and channels in some cases impassable altogether.

Miss Margaret Gould, of Uxbridge, is the guest of Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Knapman.

Mr. Chas. Starr came down from Toronto on Saturday and is a guest at "Glencairn."

Mr. Harry Beale spent the week end at "Seldom Inn," his summer home on Big Island.

Mr. D. H. Moore was a week-end visitor coming up on the "Islinda" Saturday afternoon.

Mrs. Sharpe and daughter, Miss Ruby, are the guests of the former's sister, Mrs. J. D. Craig.

Mr. Ben Simpson, of Hamilton, who has been spending his vacation here, returned home on Saturday.

Miss Jean Nicholl, of Norwood, returned home to-day after a two months vacation at the lake.

Count that day lost, whose low, descending sun, sees calls for fewer stenographers but Moon College hadn't one.

A Farmer's Sensible "Knock" Of "Let Well Enough Alone"

Editor Examiner.

Dear Sir.—When I was a boy, during the years from 1830 to 1840, all grains were cut with the sickle. The cradle was introduced; but to some minds, it was not as good as the sickle—"Let well enough alone."

A man would be hired to thresh with the flail all winter—"let well enough alone."

But boys get to be men, and then they put away childish things, and if they are men—honest men—they will not connive to make millions to the injury of others.

I know a man that has gone over the ocean 21 times in 21 years, for the Massey Company of Toronto; he told me they were making a self-binder of twelve feet, cut, six feet; horses to go behind and shove it, and it works splendidly. That is doing away with childish things.

About twenty miles west of Toronto, I saw, this year, two binders of the Peter Hamilton Company. My son told me there was a large number of them in that locality, and they all worked well. In a short time, with reciprocity, they may be shipping to the United States and other places.

When Mr. Richard Howden bought grain in Millbrook, I sold barley to him at $1.00 per bushel. The next spring I bought choice seed from him at $1.04. That made every line prosperous.

The farmers have lost millions in barley alone every year. Dr. Ryerson said the farmers were the bone and sinew of the country; yes, and they are the flesh and fat, too. Let all business close, or strike in any town or city, only let in the farm produce, and they can live twenty years. Shut the farmers' goods out and they are in death and wretchedness in one week. It is amazing to think that a greater and free market for the farmers' produce would be an injury to Ontario, when it is clearly stated in facts and figures, in different papers that every article of farm produce is much lower in Montreal and Toronto than in Rochester, Buffalo or New York, surely there is corruption visible and invisible.

When will men put away childish things? There is no man on this earth, or this world, infallible. Some give to the world that truth very clearly. "By their fruits ye shall know them."

THREE CAMPERS KILLED BY A FALLING TREE

Terrible Accident Near Ottawa During Last Night's Storm —Immense Tree Fell Upon Their Tent—Four Others Had a Narrow Escape From Death.

Special Wire to the Examiner.

OTTAWA, ONT., AUG. 26.—The terrific storm of yesterday evening brought to a tragic close the week end camping of seven Ottawaians, near East Templeton, three of whom were killed almost instantly, by a falling tree, while the other four escaped by a hair's breadth. The dead are Alphonse Schingh, Joseph Leblanc and Lucien Marineau of Three Rivers. The surviving four are Mr. D. Labourin and his son, Napoleon of Gatineau Point, Oscar Bourdrey, contractor, and his son, Joseph, of 163 York street. The bodies of the dead were brought here last night at 11.30 by the members of the party. The story was told by Mr. Boudrey, in a trembling voice, in the presence of the parents and friends of the victims of the accident.

"The tree under which we camped was thirty inches in diameter, and looked to be the last thing to give way to the wind, which, however, was wild. Schingh, Leblanc and Marineau were the first to crawl into the tent, and consequently were farthest back and were crushed under the immense trunk. Schingh and Leblanc were dead, and Marineau died later, just after we got a doctor."

The tragedy caused a sensation in Ottawa.

A WEAK CHESTED BOY

"My boy Frank seemed weak-chested, and took a very severe cold," writes Mrs. D. Stevens, Ninga, Man. "The many medicines used did not seem to benefit him, until we tried Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine and found it to be exactly what was wanted to cure him." No treatment is so thorough and effective as a cure for croup and bronchitis.

Mr. Chas. Starr came down from Toronto on Saturday and is a guest at "Glencairn."

Mr. Harry Beale spent the week end at "Seldom Inn," his summer home on Big Island.

Mr. D. H. Moore was a week-end visitor coming up on the "Islinda" Saturday afternoon.

Mrs. Sharpe and daughter, Miss Ruby, are the guests of the former's sister, Mrs. J. D. Craig.

Mr. Ben Simpson, of Hamilton, who has been spending his vacation here, returned home on Saturday.

Miss Jean Nicholl, of Norwood, returned home to-day after a two months vacation at the lake.

A Farmer's Sensible "Knock" Of "Let Well Enough Alone"

Editor Examiner.

Dear Sir.—When I was a boy, during the years from 1830 to 1840, all grains were cut with the sickle. The cradle was introduced; but to some minds, it was not as good as the sickle—"Let well enough alone."

A man would be hired to thresh with the flail all winter—"let well enough alone."

But boys get to be men, and then they put away childish things, and if they are men—honest men—they will not connive to make millions to the injury of others.

I know a man that has gone over the ocean 21 times in 21 years, for the Massey Company of Toronto; he told me they were making a self-binder of twelve feet, cut, six feet; horses to go behind and shove it, and it works splendidly. That is doing away with childish things.

About twenty miles west of Toronto, I saw, this year, two binders of the Peter Hamilton Company. My son told me there was a large number of them in that locality, and they all worked well. In a short time, with reciprocity, they may be shipping to the United States and other places.

When Mr. Richard Howden bought grain in Millbrook, I sold barley to him at $1.00 per bushel. The next spring I bought choice seed from him at $1.04. That made every line prosperous.

The farmers have lost millions in barley alone every year. Dr. Ryerson said the farmers were the bone and sinew of the country; yes, and they are the flesh and fat, too. Let all business close, or strike in any town or city, only let in the farm produce, and they can live twenty years. Shut the farmers' goods out and they are in death and wretchedness in one week. It is amazing to think that a greater and free market for the farmers' produce would be an injury to Ontario, when it is clearly stated in facts and figures, in different papers that every article of farm produce is much lower in Montreal and Toronto than in Rochester, Buffalo or New York, surely there is corruption visible and invisible.

When will men put away childish things? There is no man on this earth, or this world, infallible. Some give to the world that truth very clearly. "By their fruits ye shall know them."

THREE CAMPERS KILLED BY A FALLING TREE

Terrible Accident Near Ottawa During Last Night's Storm --Immense Tree Fell Upon Their Tent--Four Others Had a Narrow Escape From Death.

Special Wire to the Examiner.

OTTAWA, ONT., AUG. 28.—The terrific storm of yesterday evening brought to a tragic close the week end camping of seven Ottawaians, near East Templeton, three of whom were killed almost instantly, by a falling tree, while the other four escaped by a hair's breadth. The dead are Alphonse Schingh, Joseph Leblanc and Lucien Marineau of Three Rivers. The surviving four are Mr. D. Labourin and his son, Napoleon of Gatineau Point, Oscar Bourdrey, contractor, and his son, Joseph, of 163 York street. The bodies of the dead were brought here last night at 11.30 by the members of the party. The story was told by Mr. Boudrey, in a trembling voice, in the presence of the parents and friends of the victims of the accident.

"The tree under which we camped was thirty inches in diameter, and looked to be the last thing to give way to the wind, which, however, was wild. Schingh, Leblanc and Marineau were the first to crawl into the tent, and consequently were farthest back and were crushed under the immense trunk. Schingh and Leblanc were dead, and Marineau died later, just after we got a doctor."

The tragedy caused a sensation in Ottawa.

A WEAK CHESTED BOY

"My boy Frank seemed weak-chested and took a very severe cold," writes Mrs. D. Stevens, Ninga, Man. "The many medicines used did not seem to benefit him, until we tried Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine and found it to be exactly what was wanted to cure him." No treatment is so thorough and effective as a cure for croup and bronchitis.

POINTER FOR THE BRITISH-BORN

You are told quite a lot in the present election campaign, if you read the Conservative newspapers, and you will probably be told quite a lot by Conservative speakers during the campaign, that the Liberal party is disloyal because it wishes to open an additional market for the produce of Canadian farmers.

You know enough about the affairs of the Old Country to be aware that she gets her strength, not so much from what she produces as from what she sells, and especially from what she lends to the other nations of the world. You know that!

But it may surprise you to know, says the Ottawa Free Press, that good old Great Britain has 3,440 million dollars invested in the United States as against 1862 million dollars invested in Canada.

You never thought for an instant that the Mother Country was disloyal to Canada because she loaned more money to the United States than she loaned to Canada. Did you?

Why then should you be led to believe that an increase of Canada's trade with the United States should lead to annexation? The loaning of English money to the Americans does not lessen the loyalty of the men who make the loans. Why should the loyalty of Canadians to the Empire be lessened because they sell more to the States?

Money has no country save that to which the interest returns. Why should not the same principle apply to the products of the Canadian farmer and manufacturer?

BUSINESS IS BUSINESS.

"You fellows up here in Peterborough get pretty nearly everything you ask for," said a Port Hope man of slightly Conservative leanings, who was spending a few hours in Peterborough the other day. "Look at your magnificent new armouries, your rural mail delivery all through the West Riding, your Government wharves, your City postal facilities, and now I understand you are to get one of the best rifle ranges in Canada, and a new $70,000 system of wharves."

"Do you know how we get them?" mildly inquired the Peterborough young man.

"Yes, I do," said the man from the Lake-front town. "I know darn well—you send the right man to Ottawa."

"You see it's like this with us down there," continued the Port Hope visitor, "when the Conservative government was in power at Ottawa, we sent a Conservative member, and we got nothing, for the reason that the Tory Government looked upon the Riding as a safe Conservative seat. Well, when the government changed, we still sent a Conservative member to Ottawa, and still got nothing, for the reason that our member had little influence with the Liberal Government, and perhaps didn't try very hard to use what he had. You know how it is—there are hundreds of towns requiring government improvements, but unless you have a good, live, fighting member, who is friendly to the party in power, you have little chance. Governments are human, you know, after all."

"Yes, I guess you size the thing up right," broke in the Peterborough citizen. "We know what is best for the town and we vote accordingly. Hundreds of people in this Riding vote for the man, regardless of political leanings. When we have a candidate such as Mr. Stratton, who is able—and largely able because he tries—to get Government improvements where required, we "boost" him along. We don't get steered away by some infernal side issue, but we vote for what we think is our own best interests."

"Well, it's common talk throughout the district," continued the Port Hope man, "that you fellows get whatever you want at Ottawa, just because you send the right man to represent you. Do you know that after all, you are not to be blamed for doing so. I do not think that any city of its size in Canada can boast of the Government improvements that Peterborough can boast of. Why, do you know, I've run across several former Port Hope residents of Peterborough. They were Tories in Port Hope. They tell me that they are still Tories, but that business is business out in Peterborough, and that they are merely voting for the best interests of the city when they are voting for Mr. Stratton."

"Yes, I fully believe you have us trimmed in the common sense way you play the game out here," concluded the visitor, and the conversation turned to baseball and other subjects.

WHERE THE WORKING MAN GETS HIS.

The reciprocity canvasser's real difficulty is showing how, if the farmer "gets his," the working man can get his, too. Honest John, with a wife and family to support and a home to pay for, is intelligently selfish enough to ask: "But what's doing for me?" He listens with impatience to the argument that the farmers' direct prosperity is everybody else's indirect blessing. He is inclined to distrust the farmer's willingness to shade home prices down because his export surplus brings him in a lot of easy money abroad. He is not quite sure that the farmer has not more than evenly divided the sixty-five-per-cent. increase in the cost of living in the last twenty years with the middlemen, commission merchants, dairymen, beef and pork packers, and canneries, whose monopoly reciprocity promises to break up. His general experience is that the producer prefers to apply reductions in duty at his own, rather than to the consumer's benefit. The answer is, of course, that the working man will not be beholden to the mercy of either food-producer or middleman. The same argument that gives the Canadian farmer two markets, gives the Canadian workingman that approve check on greed—competition. The Canadian working man gets the farmer coming and going, so to speak. The Canadian working man benefits to the extent of the removed duties on the Southern States fruit and vegetables he eats in winter and spring. The Canadian farmer, who can not grow for the early market on account of our climate, benefits by the higher prices he gets in the United States market for his superior Northern products when they are in season, and when that market is exhausted the Canadian working man catches him and the United States farmer, too, on the come-back. Twenty-one general elements of his diet come into Canada for nothing and twenty-one more come in at reduced duties. He can pick and choose from half a hundred articles of his daily food, procurable under circumstances of competition that help him who buys and do not hurt him who sells. The workingman gets part of his in three cheaper, better meals a day. The British preference gives him cheap woolens and reciprocity gives him cheaper lumber to build his house. He is well taken care of.—Canadian Colliers.

POLITICS MAKES STRANGE BEDFELLOWS.

(Ottawa Free Press.)

Henri Bourassa and his old-time bete noir, Clifford Sifton, are getting closer together. They may yet appear on the same platform. Bourassa is to speak in Hull on September 5, and Sifton is to speak in Ottawa on September 5.

When only a street car ride divides them, why not let the good people of Ottawa see how they lie together in their political bed?

In their alliance against Laurier, it makes no difference to these gentlemen that one is in favour of reciprocity and the other is not, and that one is opposed to any money being spent on naval defence and the other strongly approves of such expenditure.

Another political bedfellow whose close proximity must keep Clifford Sifton awake nights is "Fighting Joe" Martin. It matters not that Martin is for and Sifton against reciprocity, or that Martin thinks and speaks hard things against the administration of his successful rival, they can all join in the chorus "Anything to beat Laurier."

In this connection, the spectacle of the Chief Conservative whip, Mr. George H. Perley, assisting yesterday at the nomination of a Borden-Bourassa candidate in Russell, an Ontario constituency, is significant.

Saturday Night's Big Rally
A Stratton Swing Of Victory

Big Registration Victory Forecasts Big Victory at the Polls and Cheers Liberal Workers---Inspiring Addresses on the Topic of the Time.

The swing of victory for Stratton was in the big rally at the Liberal committee rooms on Saturday night.

The large hall was filled to its capacity of accommodation, not with idlers, but busy workers of all ages and conditions—from the beardless young "British subject of the full age of twenty-one years" who had just registered, ready to cast his first vote for Stratton and reciprocity and good live government, to the eighty-year-old voter who had fought the battle of Liberalism on a score of "stricken fields." All over the rooms in the early part of the evening it was bustle and hurry, completing the splendid work of registration that had been carried on in the Liberal interests for the past four days, in which the Liberal workers had registered two to one of their opponents, so that it was nine o'clock before the gathering settled down to listen to the inspiriting and instructive addresses that followed.

AN HOUR OF ORATORY.

Mr. R. R. Hall, chairman of Mr. Stratton's committee, opened the ball, and after congratulating the Liberal workers on the splendid work they had done in connection with the registration of voters, showed the necessity of larger markets for the rapidly increasing output of the soil of Canada. The British market had been and still was a good market, but it could easily be glutted. The British market consisted of only 45 millions, and could only eat so much wheat and flour. With its free trade policy it was open to every country of the world. It sold to every country, and on business principles had to buy, and did buy, from every country of the world. Canada was not, or could not, be its only source of wheat supply. Russia, Australia, the Argentine, and other countries had four or five hundred millions of wheat for export, and the British market was as open to them as to Canada. Where, then, was Canada to find a market for its rapidly growing wheat production? During the last three months 50,000 British settlers and 50,000 from the United States had entered the wheat belt of the West. Consider what they would contribute to adding to the present 200 million bushel wheat crop of the West—it would soon swell to 800 or 1,000 million bushels, for which a market must be had. We must find a market for it—not in Britain alone, whose ports were open to the wheat ships of the whole world. A great British statesman, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, had described the reciprocity agreement of Canada as "a triumph of common sense." Great Britain's loyalty to herself had not been weakened by trading with every nation, and it was absurd to think that enlarged trade with our nearest neighbours would weaken Canada's loyalty to the Empire or impair the integrity of British connection.

Reciprocity opened the United States market to the natural—the soil—products of the United States, whose products of these articles was steadily decreasing and its population rapidly growing. A few years ago the United States sent 55 per cent. of its products abroad; now only 21 per cent. of her food products were exported. Thus the United States, with decreasing production and growing population—capacity of consumption—was a good new market to have opened to Canada, which was growing in population and increasing products, for which a market must be found.

If we find a larger market, if we did more business, sold more of our soil products, we should have prosperity, and that would be reflected upon all our interests, upon our manufactures, our workmen, our people generally.

WON'T HURT PETERBOROUGH.

How could reciprocity in farm products affect the interests of Peterborough? He had studied the agreement from end to end, and there was not one single item that affected the Canadian General Electric Company. Not one that affected the William Hamilton Company, nor the Lock Company, nor the Auburn Woollen Mills, nor the Colonial Weaving Company, nor the Rapid Tool Company. There might be one or two that might be slightly affected. Among them was the Quaker Oats industry, but that could not be adversely affected to any serious extent, or Mr. Robert Stewart, its head, would not be supporting Mr. Stratton in this election. The Canadian General would be greatly benefited. It had agencies in Vancouver and Winnipeg to meet the demands of the West for its products. All over the West new towns and cities were springing up, and one could not find a new town or old one that was not using the products of the Canadian General. As this country grew and developed there would be an increasing demand for the products of the Canadian General—increased employment for working men in its great works in Peterborough. There would not be this increased demand if the settlement and products of the West were not increased, and this would not be done unless the grain grower could find a market. Reciprocity opened a new market of 90 millions, which would be growing hungrier every year as home products diminished, as it was doing, and more mouths to feed were opened. The people of Peterborough were interested from every financial standpoint. Increasing orders for local industries meant more employment for local men.

KEEP PROSPERITY GROWING.

The people of Peterborough could trust a Government that had provided a new market, as well as a Government that had brought a new reign of prosperity to manufacturers and working men. Contrast Peterborough fifteen or sixteen years ago with the splendid prosperity we have now and have had for the past fifteen years. Then, the Canadian General was working half time with scanty and poorly paid employment. So were the Lock Works, the Auburn Woollen Mills, and our other factories. Why? Because the country at large was not doing business; because they did not receive orders from outsiders. Now these industries are running full time, with the full complement of orders, and some running overtime. They were half dead fifteen years ago, because the producing classes, the farmers, were not prosperous—did not have the money to back orders. Reciprocity, in giving wider markets, will help the farmer, put money in circulation, stimulate orders for our manufacturers, which, in turn, means more employment. We must keep the wheels moving. "Let well enough alone" is the slogan of dead men. The man or country that stands still, no matter how high the ground, goes behind. We saw this in every line in the world. Trade is the life blood of a nation. China, with its 400 millions of people, the richest country in the world, "lets well enough alone," with this result that its total trade is only half the trade of Canada. Russia, with 165 millions of people and two and a half times more territory, has only 200 million more total trade than Canada. Canadians are too energetic and enterprising and ambitious to subscribe to the baby cry: "Let well enough alone."

A VETERAN SPEAKS.

Mr. William Yelland said he had been voting Liberal in Peterborough for sixty years, and the results had justified his action. He had been voting for good progressive principles and prosperity and good times. When the Liberal party came to power, Mr. Kendry had told him that the Auburn Woollen Mills wouldn't be running long, even on half time—they would be shut up. But it was Mr. Kendry, not the mills that had to "shut up." About two years later Mr. Kendry appeared before the City Council asking for something in the interest of his mills, and used the argument that they deserved what he was asking, for they were prospering—running on full time—not "shut up." The Liberal policy of fifteen years ago had brought the same prosperity to the whole country and he believed that reciprocity would help do the same, and he would vote for it. The only time he had voted "Tory"—he did it out of gratitude—the candidate had done him a favour—"and I paid him up—I wanted to die out of debt." He had voted Liberal out of gratitude, too, for their policy had made the country prosperous, and those who voted Liberal in the present election would be doing so out of gratitude for past favours as well as favours to come. He urged the Liberal workers present to take courage. There were all sorts of yarns set afloat; and Mr. Yelland concluded a short, snappy speech with a quartette of epigrams:

Take courage; half the lies you hear are not true.
Hold your own.
Fight true, and
Fight to the end.

AN INSTRUCTIVE ADDRESS.

Mr. Louis F. Heyd, K.C., of Toronto, who was in town, and had found his way to the rooms, gave a splendid address. On his last visit to Peterborough he had talked on labour legislation in Mr. Stratton's interests. He recalled that he had shown that the Conservative Government had been in power from 1878, when they enacted the national policy. In all the time, from 1878 to 1896, eighteen years, they had found time and inclination to legislate in the interests of manufacturers, which was to their credit; but they had not found time to put one single act of labour legislation on the statute books of value to the working man. The Liberals had been in power only fourteen or fifteen years, and the pages of the statute books of Canada were starred with bright spots of legislation in the interests of the working man. The Liberals were only fairly seated in office when Sir William Mulock investigated the conditions and passed the fair wage law, providing that workmen on every Government contract were to get the highest current rate of wages and to see that he got them, too, a law that has since been copied by the provinces. This law was followed by a score or less of legislative measures to protect and promote the interests of the working men.

THE ANNEXATION BOGEY.

Would a Government that had showed this concern for the working men want to hurt him by reciprocity and drive him into annexation? Mr. Heyd repudiated the absurd annexation cry; all the loyalty was not in the Conservative party. Canadians all were loyal, and would stand up for their country as loyally as the Irishman newly arrived in Chicago, who took part in a Fourth of July parade. He heard everybody hurrahing for the United States, and none speaking a good word for the Green Isle. So he shouted "Hurrah for Ireland." "Hurrah for Hell!" shouted in turn a disgusted Yankee. "That's right," said Patrick, "you hurrah for your country and I'll hurrah for mine!" That was the spirit of Canadians—they loved Canada too well to sell it for the sake of free trade in turnips. The Conservatives should be the last to raise the disloyalty cry. Who, previous to reciprocity in 1854, burned the Parliament Buildings in Montreal? Who rotten-egged the Queen's representative, Lord Elgin? Who formed an annexation league in Montreal? It was a few Tories, members of the same party, who are to-day shouting their loyalty and British Connection, and insulting Liberals.

BENEFITS OF BETTER TRADE.

Canada got reciprocity in 1854 and it killed the Conservative annexation sentiment, and Conservatives have been fighting for reciprocity ever since the end of the old treaty. It was a good thing then; it is a good thing now. Nova Scotia has coal and fish to sell; the New England States want these articles; Quebec has hundreds of acres of hay—grown on land that needs no cultivation—to sell across the line in a big market. Ontario has barley to sell, and the nearest, the natural and the best market is the United States. The price of barley is 35 cents a bushel higer in Buffalo. Isn't it good business for the farmer to send it there? We needed, as Mr. Hall had shown, a larger market, for our wheat grown in the West—the best Wheat in the world, that brought 8 cents a bushel more in Minneapolis than in Winnipeg—the United States needs it; it is mixed with their own to make good, strong flour. Reciprocity removed duties—30 cents off barley and $4 a ton off hay. Was it a crime and disloyalty to remove trade barriers?

Mr. Borden says United States farm products will flood this country, and make living cheap. We sent to the United States last year 40 millions of produce, that paid three and a half millions of revenue, in spite of the high tariff. Our trade with the United States last year

What Shall I Wear?

The average woman is not fully decided what kind of suit she wants.

She has seen fashion pictures in style books, in magazines-has seen fashion plates. From all of these she has a general idea of what she wants.

At Elliot's she can see the suit that will meet her ideals, her suit, which combines all the new touches of fashion, a well fitting, tailored suit of individual style.

While we have the cheaper suits, it is to the higher class dressy garments, which we are featuring this season, that we more particularly wish to draw your attention. We have these in all their bewildering beauty and up-to-dateness, we show many hundreds of different styles and hardly two alike.

COATS AND WRAPS

The slender silhouette coat cut in straight lines is correct this season, it is very graceful and becoming. The American and the French designers are constructing their new models on these lines.

The vogue for the large collar is very strong, and many novel cuts are shown, among them are round, pointed and sailor effects, frequently these collars reach into revers but some only reach to the shoulders.

Hood effects are also much in evidence.

ELLIOT'S DEPARTMENT SHOWS GREAT VARIETY

Never before was there such a beautiful variety of ladies' garments shown, Scotch tweeds, herring-bone effects, fancy mixtures and double faced cloths are all prominently featured.

The double faced cloths promise to be the favourites for the season.

These reversible cloths are shown in a great variety of weaves, and sometimes in a combination of two weaves, as, for example, a smooth surface on one side and a rough effect on the other.

Some have a plain colour on one side and a stripe or a check or a plaid on the other, while others have two contrasting colours.

The majority of these cloths have a rough effect which promises to be unusually strong this season.

Children's Blanket Coats

These dressy little garments come in all sizes up to 14 years of age, made from all wool navy cloth trimmed with red sash, red lined hood, red trimming and large brass buttons $3.50 to $6.50

Stork Department

On the third floor in our stork department you will find everything that a baby can wear.

Girl's Department

We show a great range of girls' dresses in all the new cloths made up in the new styles of the season.

Millinery

Miss Noble with her staff will be in the millinery parlors on Friday

The high conical hat will be quite the run this winter, but we will describe them more fully later.

ELLIOT'S

was over three hundred million dollars, and we took from them nearly two hundred million dollars more than we sent them. That is, the United States got two hundred millions of our money and only paid us one hundred millions. Wouldn't it be good business to get that two hundred millions back to even up the business deal between the countries? The Conservatives have always been abusing the Liberals for the adverse balance of United States trade against Canada. And now that reciprocity is giving us a chance to get even, they are death upon it. Look at our trade relations with our neighbors. In spite of high duties, half the total trade of Canada is with the United States. We do as much business with them as with the rest of the whole world. Would it be business or not to open the way for more business in a market, which in spite of trade barriers is shown to be our natural, as it is our most convenient and, therefore, our best, market. Did Providence intend that these two countries should be commercially separated by high tariff walls? Who and what built these walls? Selfishness and greed of the favoured interests built them to help them extract from the dependent, the producer and consumer alike, money to make millionaires at the expense of the many—to artificially raise prices and make living dear for the people who pay, for the people who work.

Mr. Heyd then went on to show how tariffs helped to make food combines and how food combines forced up the cost of living—that brought it about that Canadian flour could be bought cheaper in Manchester, England, than in Winnipeg, a mile distant from where the wheat was grown that made the flour. An Ontario reaper could be bought cheaper in England than at the doors of the factory in Canada. There was such a difference in price of an Ontario-made reaper in England and Alberta—$120 and $155 respectively—that the Albertan farmer could buy this Canadian machinery in England and ship it to Alberta and make money by the transaction. Mr. Heyd showed that in other commodities somebody reaped a big profit between what was paid the producer and that paid by the consumer, thus accounting in large part for the high cost of living. The men between made profits at both ends—out of both producer and consumer. That was made possible by a tariff that made competition practically impossible. Reciprocity would remove the tariff conditions on natural products that made competition impracticable and helped the high prices of living. The tariff protected the manufacturer in his products, and the Liberal tariff by reducing the tariff on raw materials further helped the manufacturer. But in the matter of natural products the tariff permitted the exaction of low prices to the producer and high prices for the consumer. When competition governs prices, the consumer gets the benefit as well as the producer. There was some arrangement among the handlers of all the chief articles of food, by which a uniform price is charged in defiance of local conditions, or the normal laws of supply and demand, and that uniform price was not the lowest.

In all great staple articles of farm products the prices are higher in the United States; but with wheat ten cents a bushel higher in the United States, their people are somehow getting food cheaper.

Reciprocity was a business question and should be treated as such. If the Conservatives of to-day had treated it in this manner they would have been in harmony with the great Conservative leaders of the past who had always wanted Reciprocity.

When the agreement was first introduced into Parliament the Conservatives had considered it too good to be true. They were thus in sympathy with the attitude they took on the French treaty, when they condemned the Government for not getting Reciprocity with the United States.

NEED OF LARGER MARKETS.

As to the necessity of larger markets, Mr. Heyd cited Mr. Wm. Whyte, of the Canadian Pacific Railway, who said that the present wheat yield of Saskatchewan could be grown on the concession lines of that province. What then would be the city in ten years? If the western farmer does not find a market for his wheat the smoke from our factories would soon cease to rise. This applied to all his products, and what helps the farmer helps all other classes.

Mr. Heyd told of a farmer near Brantford who had a barley crop of 375 bushels; with reciprocity permitting him to market it in the United States he would get $125 more for his crop. Reciprocity was a good bargain. "Don't," said Mr. Heyd, "let them tell you that if the farmer gets more for his crops it will hurt the manufacturer."

But Reciprocity did not go as far as farmers wanted. The thousand farmers that went to Ottawa, wanted not only reciprocity in natural products, but greatly lowered tariff on some manufactured articles. But Sir Wilfrid Laurier said, "That cannot be; I am with you on natural products; but we have to stand by the manufacturer and the workingman, and their protection must not be withdrawn. We have not hurt the manufacturer, and will not hurt him."

THE CANDIDATE CHEERED AND IS CHEERED.

Hon. Mr. Stratton was received with hearty cheers, and heartily cheered his workers by referring to his country meetings held during the past week. He had never in the course of twenty-five years seen better or larger or more attentive meetings, and had never received more and heartier assurances of support, among which were many who had previously opposed him. He said the country would do its share and he felt sure from the spirit they were throwing into the work, the city would back up the country splendidly. He had been told by some employees of the Ackerman harness company that if reciprocity passed it would injure that enterprising and flourishing industry. This concern had grown with and through the growth of the West. The West wanted Reciprocity, which it believed would promote its prosperity. If the farmers of the West made more money by Reciprocity couldn't they buy more of the harness made by the Ackerman Company, which, largely thanks to the help of the West, has grown so that the buildings have had to be enlarged.

FREE EXCHANGE OF FARM PRODUCTS ONLY.

He was in favour of free exchange in farm products but was opposed to, and would oppose in Parliament, any reduction that would hurt the manufacturer or the working man. In this he was in line with the policy of the Government and the assurances of Sir Wilfrid Laurier and Mr. Fielding. Mr. Borden said here on Thursday night that he was in favour of Imperial Preference. What did that mean? It meant Chamberlainism—free entry of all food products from the several British dominions and a tax against bread stuffs coming from all other countries. That meant a tax on British food supplies; that meant taxing the poor man's loaf. Did we want better trade if we had to buy it by making it harder for the poor man in Great Britain to feed himself and his family? No. We had the British market now; we had the home market, and Reciprocity would give us another market, without interfering with the other two.

GOOD REGISTRATION WORK.

Mr. Stratton thanked his city supporters for the hard and splendid work they had done in registering the city voters. The result showed how well they had worked in his interests in this regard. There were about 1750 registered, and of these about two-thrids had been put on by the wide awake and well organized Liberal workers. There were about 350 left unregistered, but there were very, very few of those that would have helped the Liberal cause. His friends in Peterborough had done splendidly and he again thanked them; if they kept up the pace till September 21st he was sure that neither himself nor they would have anything to regret. In concluding he asked them not to forget the mass meeting in the Opera House on Thursday night, August 31st, which would be addressed by Hon. C. P. Graham, Minister of Railways and Canals, who had never refused anything that had been asked in the interests of the public of West Peterborough by its humble representative.

Next Saturday night there would be another rally in these rooms, and if it beat the present one it would have to be a very great one.

With cheers for the King, and the candidate, Mr. Stratton, the most successful Saturday night gathering so far held was brought to a conclusion.

Died At The Exhibition

Word was received this morning of the death under very tragic circumstances, of Mr. William James Carveth, of Toronto, brother of Mrs. Andrew Wilson, of Union street, Peterborough.

Deceased was to have held a stand at the Toronto Exhibition and Saturday was engaged in preparing for the event, when he was suddenly seized with a bad attack of acute indigestion. Despite all efforts to restore him, he succumbed within half an hour.

Mrs. Wilson, on receiving the message on Saturday afternoon, went to Toronto, and has not yet returned.

Mr. Carveth, who was in his sixtieth year, was born in Warsaw and later in life went to Jackson, Michigan. He has now resided in Toronto for the past two years. He is survived by a wife and three sons, all of whom are married, as well as one sister, above mentioned.

The remains were conveyed to Jackson, Mich., this morning for interment.

GREAT EXCITEMENT

Excitement prevailed for some time at the corner of Smith and George streets, at 8.40 on Saturday evening, when a horse belonging to Mr. Pulkinghorn, shied at an auto and scrambled up on the sidewalk, which is of wood, and pulled the rig, which contained Mr. Cahoon, after it. The animal, in its excitement, in some manner got its feet caught under the boards of the sidewalk, which necessitated the pulling up of a number of the planks before the horse could be released. The rig was somewhat damaged, but the horse escaped without any serious injury.

These Results You Can Be Sure of When You Use

Dr. Chase's Ointment

Quick and certain are the effects of Dr. Chase's Ointment. Itching is stopped almost as soon as it is applied. The sores are cleaned out, morbid growth is arrested, and the healing process is soon set in action.

Compare these results with the tediousness and uncertainty of internal treatment for itching skin disease. By all means look after the health of the blood and the system generally, but get rid of the annoying and torturing skin ailment at once by using Dr. Chase's Ointment.

The reputation of Dr. Chase's Ointment has been made by its marvellous success in the cure of eczema and piles. But it is just as effective in the cure of old sores and wounds which have defied ordinary treatments and been given up by doctors.

Dr. Chase's Ointment is prized by mothers as a treatment for the skin troubles of babies, such as chafing, skin irritation, scald head and baby eczema. Its soothing influence stops the itching, and it prevents the development of eczema from these lesser skin troubles.

Mrs. Oscar Vancott, St Antoine, Sask., writes that Dr. Chase's Ointment cured her boy of eczema when his head was a mass of scabs, and he suffered untold agony from the itching. Dr. Chase's Ointment, 60 cents a box, at all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto.

THE EVENING CHIT-CHAT

By Ruth Cameron

We went on very prosperously, CONSIDERING, as people say of a young lady's drawing, or a Frenchman's English, or a womans tragedy, or of the poor little dwarf who works without fingers, or the ingenious sailor who writes with his toes, or generally of any performance which is accomplished by means seemingly inadequate to its production."—Miss Mitford.

I wonder sometimes if that word "considering" doesn't do more harm than any word in the English language.

I have read somewhere that it takes a clever man to succeed, but twice as clever a man to explain why he didn't succeed.

I don't think so.

For there is always some explanatory circumstance which he can work up and hitching "considering" to it, persuade himself, at least, that he really has done wonders, "considering."

"Considering" is the excuse that half success always gives for not being complete success.

"Considering" is the screen of justification that the soul which knows that it is not receiving what it deserves of itself puts up between itself and the truth.

"Considering" is the coward's word and the sluggard's word. When you find yourself thinking that you have done anything pretty well "considering," look out. You are in a frame of mind that is fatal to progress. Ask yourself how well you have done, not "considering," not making allowances, and you will have a far better, if bitterer tonic for effort.

If we could only drop the word considering and all its equivalents from our language, I think we would be better off.

But hold—what am I saying? I forget. On the contrary that would be a calamity indeed, for I remember now there are other uses for the word. Sweet and commendable uses.

For I think the really great man is he who is "as tolerant of other people's sins and weaknesses as he is intolerant of his own."

"Considering that she had no mother, I think she is a very good girl."

"Considering that he had no education I think he has succeeded wonderfully."

These are the proper uses of "considering". The more times we use it like that the fewer times we use it with the first person, the better for our soul's good.

THE FIGHT IN DURHAM

Sandy Kelly, the Liberal Candidate, is Making a Splendid Run

Mr. Sandy Kelly, of Cavan, Liberal candidate for Durham in the present political contest, was in Peterborough on Saturday night, and paid a visit to the Liberal committee rooms, where he was warmly received. Sandy Kelly is a worker, and the way he is making things hum in the Tory stronghold of Durham is surprising his opponents. Mr. Kelly reports that reciprocity sentiment is particularly strong throughout the front townships of Durham county and an ex-president of the Conservative Association of the County, Mr. Lovekin is taking the platform in behalf of the Liberal candidate.

Mr. Kelly goes into the township of Darlington this week, where he will hold a series of three meetings. Hon. W. L. MacKenzie King, Minister of Labour, will speak in Mr. Kelly's behalf at Port Hope early in September.

Durham County has generally been looked upon as hopelessly Conservative, but Sandy Kelly is giving the Opposition the fight of their lives.

GET POWER
The Supply Comes From Food

If we get power from food, why not strive to get all the power we can. That is only possible by use of skilfully selected food that exactly fits the requirements of the body.

Poor fuel makes a poor fire and a poor fire is not a good steam producer.

"From not knowing how to select the right food to fit my needs, I suffered grievously for a long time from stomach troubles," writes a lady from a little town in Missouri.

"It seemed as if I would never be able to find out the sort of food that was best for me. Hardly anything that I could eat would stay on my stomach. Every attempt gave me heartburn and filled my stomach with gas. I got thinner and thinner until I literally became a living skeleton and in time was compelled to keep to my bed.

"A few months ago I was persuaded to try Grape-Nuts food, and it had such good effect from the very beginning that I have kept up its use ever since. I was surprised at the ease with which I digested it. It proved to be just what I needed.

"All my unpleasant symptoms, the heartburn, the inflated feeling which gave me so much pain disappeared. My weight gradually increased from 98 to 116 pounds, my figure rounded out, my strength came back, and I am now able to do my housework and enjoy it. Grape-Nuts food did it." Name given by Canadian Postum Co., Windsor, Ontario.

A ten days' trial will show anyone some facts about food.

ST. JOHN'S CHOIR

St. John's choir re-assembled in goodly numbers yesterday after the holidays and signalized the occasion by singing choral evensong last night in a most praiseworthy manner.

The Rev. Chas. Carpenter sung the Tallis' Respones (Festal) in C., the precentor being heartily responded to by the choir and congregation. The Psalms were given a perfect rendering, the last two being specially noticeable for unaccompanied effects. In the hymns and anthem the phrasing and expression were splendidly brought out, and a word of praise is due to Miss Quartermaine for a nice rendering of the soprano solo in the anthem. At the morning service Thomas' setting of "As pants the hart" was finely rendered by Miss Quartermaine and Mrs. R. J. Devey.

Next Monday the choir have been most kindly invited to the cottage, (on the "Otonabee") of Mr. and Mrs. Ryerson Ritchie, to spend a pleasant day, an event a large number hope to take part in.

The last practice but one, for the Harvest Festival, will be held on Thursday next at 8 p.m.

LONDON, AUG. 28.— The Foreign Office is somewhat alarmed this morning by despatches stating that a strong detachment of Spanish soldiers are preparing to seize a part of Morocco. This further complicates the Moroccan situation.

MR. BURNET PASSES AWAY

Mr. James Burnet, for almost a quarter of a century superintendent of the Auburn Woollen Mills, and one of the best known and most highly respected residents of Peterborough, passed away at his residence, 833 Water street, on Saturday.

The deceased had been ailing since last January, but had only been seriously ill for about a week, and the intelligence of his death will come as a shock to his many friends. He was born in Cobourg, but twenty-five years ago came to Peterborough as superintendent of the Auburn Mills, a position he held until last January, when ill health forced him to give it up. He had, during his long connection with the company, always held the esteem and regard of everyone connected with the firm and will be greatly missed by the employees as well as the heads of the mill.

He is survived by his wife and one daughter, Mrs. H. H. Stevens of Port Elgin. Two sisters, Mrs. Alex. C. Hutchinson of Montreal, and Mrs. Allan of Cobourg, are also left to mourn his loss. The deceased was a member of the Independent Order of Oddfellows and of the Ancient Order of Foresters. He was a Presbyterian in religion and an attendant at St. Paul's Presbyterian church.

The funeral will take place on Tuesday afternoon at 2.30 o'clock from the family residence, 833 George street, to Little Lake cemetery.

OTONABEE ELECTORS HEAR MR. KERR

Mr. Cowan, of Farm and Dairy, Speaks---Mr. George A. Gillespie on the Cheese Industry---Meeting at Zion Hall.

Mr. F. D. Kerr, Liberal candidate for East Peterborough, opened his campaign in Otonabee on Friday night last with a rousing meeting at Zion Hall. If the attendance at the meeting and the enthusiasm displayed, can be taken as an indication of the feeling of the farmers of the township towards reciprocity, then they are overwhelmingly in favour of the free exchange of natural products with the United States. The question was put clearly before the electors of Otonabee by the candidate, Mr. Kerr, Mr. Cowan, Editor of Farm and Dairy and Mr. G. A. Gillespie, of Peterborough.

The chair was occupied by Mr. Walter Dickson, who, in opening the meeting expressed his strong approval of reciprocity and his belief in the success of the Liberal candidate in East Peterborough.

Mr. G. A. Gillespie.

Mr. Gillespie was the first speaker. As one who has been closely associated with the cheese industry of Peterborough County for a number of years, he felt that he could speak with some degree of knowledge as to the benefits that were bound to accrue thereto, in this district, by the free entry of cheese into the American markets. By the proposed agreement it was intended that Canada and the United States would trade with each other in natural products without collecting duties. It was a simple arrangement and would undoubtedly prove beneficial to the farmers of Canada. Why Mr. Sexsmith should oppose such a measure was beyond the speaker's comprehension. Mr. Gillespie pointed out that Canada would still have the English market, but in addition we would have the United States market of ninety million people. Canada produced better cheese than the Americans can make, and the argument of competition of American cheese in Canada is not sound. Canada has to compete against the American cheese in the English market and finds no difficulty in beating them out.

Mr. Gillespie paid a warm tribute to Mr. Kerr, the Liberal candidate, whom he felt sure would make an excellent representative for East Peterborough.

The Candidate.

Mr. F. D. Kerr, the Liberal candidate, was given a splendid reception upon rising to address the meeting. He pointed out that Mr. Borden had forced the Government to appeal to the country upon the question of reciprocity in natural products, and it was now for the farmers of East Peterborough to say whether they really desired an additional market of ninety millions of people. He described the annexation cry as downright nonsense. Reciprocity in natural products with the United States was merely a trade agreement for the mutual benefit of the whole country. Sir John Macdonald, the great Conservative chieftain, was an advocate of reciprocity in natural products. As late as the year 1891 Sir John Macdonald appealed to the country on the strength of his assurance that he would endeavour to negotiate a measure of reciprocity in natural products with the United States. It is nothing but rot for any speaker to attempt to argue that any farmer would want to become an American citizen, because he might get more money for the products of his farm in the United States market. Bishop Mills, of the Church of England, Kingston, as well as many other prominent independent thinking men, quite recently said that "the disloyalty cry is absurd and the opposition to the agreement on these grounds is ridiculous." Continuing Mr. Kerr pointed out that never, even in the darkest days of Canada was there wavering among the Canadian people in allegiance to the flag under which they were born. The thought of sacrificing their alliance on the altar of material prosperity never occurred to them. They have succeeded, too, in the face of all their difficulties, in the task to which they set themselves. A fair measure of prosperity has been attained. Greater prosperity they believe would be theirs with that free access to the American market which is now offered them on honourable terms. Their faith is justified by the knowledge of the abounding prosperity enjoyed under the old reciprocity treaty, and by the extent of the trade they have with the American market even now, in face of a hostile tariff. To say that with the greater prosperity, which will come as a result of freedom to sell in United States cities, there will be a weakening in the loyalty of men such as these, is too grotesquely absurd to be insulting. Men who have kept Canada in the Empire in the days of adversity and suffering will not abandon their heritage in a period of prosperity.

Mr. Kerr then went over many items mentioned in the proposed agreement and showed how advantageous to the Canadian farmer free access to the American market would be. His address was followed closely by the audience, many of whom were of Conservative leanings, but who are gradually beginning to realize that reciprocity will be a benefit to the Canadian farmer, and that the talk of annexaton is only an attempt to draw the attention of the electors from the real issue.

Mr. Cowan.

Mr. Cowan, Editor of Farm and Dairy, made a splendid address. He declared that this was his first public apeech on a political platform, but the issue was one of vital importance to the farmers of Canada, and he felt it was his duty to place the question of reciprocity squarely before them.

He pointed out that all the farmers associations throughout Canada were a unit in their endorsation of the proposed measure. He himself, was with the western farmers who stormed Ottawa asking the Government to grant them greater freedom of trade. As a matter of fact, the deputation was not made up of western farmers alone, but every section of Ontario was represented, and the delegates were members of both political parties. The Government has now agreed to grant to them practically everything they asked for and it remained now only for the farmers to say whether or not they would accept it. Mr. Cowan dealt with many of the items mentioned in the agreement showing the benefit the Canadian farmer is bound to receive by their free entry into the United States market. If the electors of East Peterborough vote for Mr. Kerr, who is a supporter of the reciprocity agreement, they will vote for their own best interests, and if they vote against him they will be voting to their own disadvantage.

The chairman paid a warm compliment to the splendid practical address delivered by Mr. Cowan, the able editor of the "Farm and Dairy," and the meeting was brought to a close by three cheers for the King, Sir Wilfrid Laurier and Mr. Kerr.

ARE ANGRY AT KING GEORGE

London is divided into twenty-eight different boroughs, each of which, so far as governmental organization is concerned, is really a city by itself, and at the head of each one is a mayor. These mayors are very angry indeed at King George. The reason is that he knighted none of them during the recent Coronation ceremonies, whereas the mayors of the various provincial cities he has visited since Coronation day have received a knighthood apiece.

To make matters worse, it transpires that a representative list of the London mayors was actually on the original "Coronation honour list" and some one—the mayors have not yet been able to find out just who, but it may have been the King himself—blue-pencilled it. And the explanation given out from the Lord Chamberlain's office does not help things, either. A provincial mayor, it is pointed out, is really a mayor. But the mayor of a London borough, though called a mayor, is in fact only the chairman of a ward council.

The London mayors have held a couple of meetings to consider the way they have been treated. It was finally decided that it would make them ridiculous to voice a formal protest, but they are boiling mad, for all that.

A NOVEL WAY OF BUILDING CEMENT WALL

WASHINGTON, AUG. 28.—Experiments are now under way along the Panama Canal with a "gun" with which cement is being blown upon rock surfaces. The rock sides of Culebra Cut are crumbling, it is found, and to save them from further deterioration, a coating of cement is being applied. This coating, which is about an inch thick, is expected to prevent further crumbling. The cement is blown with such force by the cement gun that it is believed it will become practically a part of the rock itself.

The "gun" mounted on a flat-car, has a capacity of coating 200 square yards of surface in one day. Five men operate the apparatus.

It is operated by compressed air. Sand and cement are blown from a nozzle with great force. At the nozzle, water is mixed with the sand and cement, so that by the time the ingredients reach the rock surface against which they are directed, they form a well-mixed concrete mixture.

TOM ECK'S BICYCLE GIRLS ARE AT ROYAL THEATRE

Tom Eck's famous bicycle racing girls are the attraction for the first part of this week at the Royal Theatre and should prove a magnet that will fill the house at every performance. The girls have been causing a sensation all over the circuit by their clever riding and will doubtless be well received here. Tom Eck, whose name is a household one as far as athletics are concerned, will be remembered by local sport enthusiasts as the man who introduced Fred Simpson, the Indian runner, into the professional game and who handled the Peterborough Indian until he retired from the game. He has invented an apparatus for use in his indoor bicycle racing by which the distance covered by the contestants is indicated by a large dial so that the audience can follow the contest closely. Handicap and even-all races between the girls make up the programme. One of the troupe claims the title of the champion lady bicyclist and can tear off a mile on the machine in 1.24. No one should fail to see this thrilling act at the Royal.

LIBERALS WIN FIRST BLOOD IN THIS CONTEST

In Four Days' Registration Liberals Put on Two-Thirds of the New Voters---The Score is Two to One

The registration which closed on Saturday evening, in connection with the Dominion elections, was the largest in the history of Peterborough, no less than 1787 names being added to the list. Although registration was brisk all through there was an especial rush on Saturday, when some six hundred were put on.

There were about 2,500 names to be registered and Mr. Stratton's committees say that nearly every supporter was registered.

Mr. Stratton's committee report having won in the registration by two to one.

It was thought all along that she had frequently warned her daughter never to go out alone with her husband on account of his threats and his disapated condition.

Pleased With Crop

Examiner Special:

TORONTO, AUG. 28.—Sir William Mackenzie having returned from the west, says he is well pleased with the crop situation. The damage by frost will be insignificant. Saskatchewan and Alberta conditions are not so favourable as Manitoba, but still there is nothing to complain about.

GOOD POSITIONS

The Peterborough Business College is a worthy link in a chain of Seven Business Colleges, located in the cities of London, Peterborough, Welland, and the towns of Orangeville, Walkerton, Wingham, and Clinton. Owing to its high-grade work it is affiliated with the Commercial Educators' Association of Canada. It is freely admitted that owing to these connections, its students get the very best positions. Fall openings are on Aug. 28th, and Sept. 5th, but at this school each student is instructed privately at his or her own desk; students may enter any day. Many students study all at home, and others partly at home and finish at the College. As Spotton Colleges are the largest trainers in Canada, and have thirty years' experience, it would be well for young people to get their training there. Last year Mr. Spotton trained over 1,200 young people and placed them in good positions. What he has done for thousands of others he can do for you.

The Reciprocity agreement saves the people from those who would monopolize their food supply.

PANIC IN THEATRE

Twenty-Six Killed and Twenty-five Hurt in a Struggle When Small Boy Shouted Alarm of Fire

TERRIBLE FATALITY

Canonsburg, Penna., Aug. 28.—Twenty-six dead from suffocation, twenty-five seriously injured, thirty suffering from minor hurts. That is the human toll exacted Saturday night during an inexcusable panic at a moving-picture show in the Canonsburg Opera House. The moving picture machine developed a slight defect. There occurred a noise like a "click." A small boy shouted "Fire!" At the same time starting for the narrow exit. Bolas Dubrowski, a foreign miner, a giant in proportions, jumped from his seat and ran wildly for the same exit. In a moment there was a fighting, struggling mass after him. At the head of a narrow stairway, which led to the street, the foreigner tripped. As he rolled down the stairs he swept others from their feet, who were awaiting their turn to enter the theatre, and soon there was an indescribable pile of humanity at the foot of the steps, battling like mad.

It was all over within a short time. Volunteer firemen, several policemen and a few level-headed citizens untangled the human mass. The unhurt and those slightly injured were pulled from the top of the pile. As they gained the street they ran screaming like maniacs to all parts of the small town. Next came the more seriously hurt, and these were sent home or taken to nearby houses, while a few were rushed unconscious to hospitals. Then the rescuers came to the silent forms of those who had reached the fatal stairway first. One after another the victims, many of them women and small children, were carried to the sidewalk. All had been suffocated, and the faces showed terror.

Coroner James T. Hefran has begun a rigid investigation. He arrived at the scene early yesterday, and within a short time had secured a jury.

Measurements taken by members of the jury showed the stairway leading to the second floor of the building, the main floor of the opera house, to be only six and one-half feet wide, while the doorway at the bottom was not more than eight feet high.

It is customary to give two or three performances each evening, and Saturday the moving picture machine operator was about to complete the first when a film parted. Some of the audience had already commenced to leave the building and other persons were on the stairway coming up.

Dubrowski's wild flight through the theatre and his subsequent stumble down the stairs into those entering the building, was the beginning of the death struggling jam at the foot of the stairs. The bodies clogged the doorway. Men walked over them and fought for positions of safety until, overwhelmed by the weight from the moving mass behind, they too were crushed down to death. When the doorway had been filled still other persons walked over the bodies of those who had gone down, and breaking the glass transom over the door crawled through and dropped into the street.

During this time Manager Ferguson had endeavored to stop the panic. Accompanied by his wife he started for the stairs when the first alarm was given, but seeing there was no escape there, he made his way to the stage. Calling loudly to the frightened people to follow him, he led the way to the rear of the stage, and fully three hundred escaped in this way.

Of the twenty-six dead, thirteen were children, seven of them pupils in the public schools. Yesterday it was decided by the school authorities to postpone for a week the opening of the schools.

One Way of Lowering Prices.

New York, Aug. 28.—The fourth attempt in three weeks to blow up a butcher shop occurred here on Saturday, and the police believe that the bomb-throwers are taking this means to protest against the high price of meat.

The bomb which exploded early on Saturday in front of a shop on Christie street smashed all the windows in that establishment and the one adjoining and blew a large hole in the sidewalk, but hurt nobody. The occupants of the neighboring tenements swarmed out into the streets and the police reserves were called to quiet the panic.

Killed In Race Riot.

Macon, Ga., Aug. 28.—In a race riot at Indian Springs Hotel, one deputy was killed, another fatally injured and other persons injured. The hotels may have to close for the season, as there is a general exodus of guests. The Jackson Rifles are being held in readiness to go there for duty.

LAUNCH RUN DOWN

Toronto Nurse, Miss Hattie Gates, Lost Her Life and Two Others Had a Very Narrow Escape From Drowning

CROSSED IN FRONT

Toronto, Aug. 28.—Run down by a ferry boat on the bay at 9.30 Saturday night, a gasoline launch went to the bottom and Miss Hattie Gates, aged 36, a nurse, of 45 Rose avenue, was drowned. Two others, Miss Hill, another nurse, of 107 East Gerrard street, and Clayton Smith of 543 College street, owner of the boat, were rescued. Miss Hill, who went down three times, held her hand over her mouth in order to keep the water out of her lungs.

Smith tried to run his launch across the bow of the Toronto Ferry Co.'s boat, F. R. Clark. When half-way across the bow of the ferry crashed into the launch and ran right over it.

Both Miss Hill and Smith are confined to their home, suffering from shock. Both were bruised and shaken up pretty badly.

The launch did not try to pass the ferry at right angles, but raced up from a little to the rear on the port side, so the captain, who was looking ahead, did not see them coming up.

Smith apparently depended on the speed of the launch to carry him safely past the ferry. The speed of the launch was 18 miles per hour.

John McNab, the engineer of the "Clark," did a remarkably hazardous feat in an effort to save the launch. He was looking out of the port side of the boat and he saw the launch speed toward the bow of the ferry. Leaping to his engine McNab reversed the propellor without turning off the steam. The action shook the ferry so much that several people were thrown from their feet. Reversing the engines without shutting off the steam is very dangerous, for it is liable to blow everything up. Just as the engineer threw over his lever the bells ordering him to reverse were rang from the bridge.

Though the ferry stopped in a remarkably short distance, it went too far to save the launch.

Cars Are Delayed.

St. Catharines, Aug. 28.—Traffic on the entire system of the Niagara, St. Catharines and Toronto Railway was tied up for several hours Saturday, owing to an accident to the power transmission line at Thorold. The cables of the transmission line cross beneath the canal at Thorold, owing to vessel traffic. Saturday morning at 11 o'clock the steamer Ames, which was unloading near N. S. and T. swing bridge, broke from her moorings and started down stream. To prevent smashing into the bridge, the anchor was thrown out and caught in the cables at the bottom of the canal, dragging them along and putting them out of commission.

Automatically every car on the Falls, Port Dalhousie, Welland and local line stopped and for several hours not a wheel turned. A crowd of Toronto excursionists coming on trolleys from the steamer Dalhousie City at Port Dalhousie had to foot it part of the distance to the city park.

Sea Monarch Lauched.

Quincy, Mass., Aug. 28.—New standards in naval architecture and construction, particularly in size, are set by the Argentine Republic's new super-dreadnought battleship Rivadavia, which was launched at the yards of the Fore River Shipbuilding Co. on Saturday.

When completed, the ship will have a displacement of 25,600 tons, approximately 1,500 tons heavier than the greatest projected sea-fighters of the United States, and the Lion, Great Britain's new queen of the sea.

Premier Makes a Splendid Speech at Valleyfield—Many Manufacturers Support Reciprocity Pact

A BIG RECEPTION

Valleyfield, Aug. 28.—The closing meeting of the campaign of Sir Wilfrid Laurier in the Province of Quebec, held in Valleyfield on Saturday, proved to be one of the biggest of the week. Nearly 7,000 people listened to the Prime Minister, Mr. Lemieux and Hon. Sydney Fisher with appreciation, and much enthusiasm was displayed. Sir Wilfrid left Saturday evening for the Maritime Provinces. Valleyfield is one of the busiest manufacturing and industrial towns near Montreal. The immense plant of the Montreal Cotton Co., the water power developed by the Canadian Light & Power Co., and many other large enterprises make it a centre of considerable importance.

Nearly every speaker refuted the allegation that reciprocity would hurt the manufacturers. Several big firms were mentioned in the agricultural implement trade, who, although their make of articles enters Canada with reduced duty under the pact, were quite prepared to support reciprocity. Hon. Mr. Fisher also said that the fiercest opponents of reciprocity were Canadian packers and middlemen who had been enjoying profits characterized by the speaker as "extravagant and exorbitant."

Sir Wilfrid was well received. In dealing with annexation he said: "It is simply arrant nonsense. Annexation could only come either by conquest or by voluntary agreement. No one hints of the intention of the United States to conquer us by war; and if ever the Canadian people are asked to vote in favor of annexation it will not be by the Laurier Government or by a Liberal Government." The Toronto Board of Trade manifesto he considered an insult to the intelligence of the people. "We want to remain Canadians, and Canadians we shall remain, whether the United States shall trade with us or not. I tell the United States that the great mistake they have made for the past fifty years was to treat Canada as a negligible quantity."

The speaker traced the history of reciprocity, covering familiar ground. "It is not the manufacturers who are against reciprocity," he said, "because it does not harm them. The farmers benefit by it, and when the agricultural classes are rich the country is rich. Reciprocity benefits the workingman of Valleyfield as much as any man in the country."

The Premier defended his war record, that the navy law contained provision for compulsory service. Canada had become a nation, he said, without violence and without separation from the mother country, a unique occurrence in world history. As a nation Canada required a navy for self-defence. Sir Wilfrid said he bore the Cross of St. Michael.

In concluding, Sir Wilfrid, who expressed his belief in victory, urged the return of the Liberal candidate in the riding of Beauharnois — Mr. Papineau.

BRIEFS FROM THE WIRES.

Sergt.-Maj. Gilmore was buried with military honors at Hamilton.

Wreckage from the missing Midland tug Martin was found off Point au Baril.

Forest fires have destroyed an immense quantity of pulpwood in Newfoundland.

Lightning struck a Toronto Sunday school building while services were being held.

Canadian immigration agents in the United States are being besieged by railway men who have been released by the United States railroads.

The Lusitania is the first Cunarder to leave the Mersey this week. She took, besides her own passengers, those who were booked for the Campania, the sailing of which had been cancelled.

Edward Morgan, a respected resident of Martintown, Ont., was almost instantly killed by the mail train near Cornwall. Mr. Morgan's horse was also killed and the buggy was shattered like so much matchwood.

Burglars attempted to rob A. L. Jackson's jewelry store at St. Catharines Saturday. They broke the window with a large rock but were scared away after they had secured an open-face gold watch and two pipes.

Angered, he says, because Grace Lyons of Chicago, his sweetheart, broke her promise of marrying him, Walter Hopper of Chicago, attacked her on board the steamer Puritan and tossed her overboard. The girl was drowned.

Sunk In Collision.

Port Huron, Mich., Aug. 28.—The steel steamer W. H. Gilbert of the Pittsburg Steamship Co., collided with the wooden steamer City of Genoa of the Gilchrist Transportation Co. of Cleveland, in the St. Clair River, opposite this port, in a dense fog on Saturday.

The Genoa sank with a big hole in her port side. She was anchored at the time of the accident and the Gilbert was bound down with ore. The crew of the Genoa escaped on the Gilbert, which was in charge of Capt. Hanley of North Tonawanda, N.Y.

Killed In Race.

Elgin, Ill., Aug. 28.—Near the end of the road race Saturday Sam Jacobs, mechanician for Dave Buck, was killed and Buck himself was injured when the Pope-Hartford in which they were speeding left the track and turned completely over.

Buck was traveling at about 65 miles an hour when he threw a tire. His car jumped off the track, throwing the driver out and inflicting what may prove fatal injuries. His machinist was crushed to death instantly.

BORDEN AT NAPANEE.

Sir Mackenzie Bowell Assists at Conservative Rally.

Napanee, Aug. 28.—Mr. Borden spoke at Napanee on Saturday to fifteen hundred persons and Sir Mackenzie Bowell assisted him.

Mr. Borden and his party motored from Campbellford and made a short stop at Belleville, where an informal reception was held. The meeting at Napanee was held in the Harvey Warner Park, and business was practically suspended while speaking was in progress. From all parts of the district farmers drove in to hear Mr. Borden and his associates.

Sir Mackenzie Bowell called history to testify as to the intention of the United States in connection with the reciprocity agreement. He could see the spectre of continentalism concealed in the agreement. "Has not the policy of the United States been the absorption of every foot of this continent?" he asked amid cheers. "Did they not seize Texas and California? Did they not acquire, by purchase from Russia, Alaska, which should have belonged to Canada? Did they not take advantage of an opportunity to obtain control of the Hawaiian Islands? Did they not enter upon a most unjustifiable war with Spain to secure possession of the Phillipine Islands?"

British blood which coursed through the veins of Canadians would rise against any such attempt on the part of the United States towards the Dominion. He could not forget that Sir Wilfrid Laurier had predicted the separation of Canada from the Empire "as the ripe fruit falls from the parent branch." "His idea," declared the ex-Prime Minister, "is either the independence of Canada or its absorption by the United States."

H. A. Baker, president of the Conservative Association of Lennox and Addington, was in the chair. Among those on the platform were: John Gallagher, M.P.P.; A. A. Richardson, M.P.P.; J. W. Johnston, M.P.P., W. C. Mikel, Belleville; Rev. Alexander McDonald, T. G. Carscallon, M.P.P.; W. F. Nickle, K.C., M.P.P.; Charles Bowell, Belleville.

"Third Degree" Confession.

Boonville, Ind., Aug. 28.—After being pressed by continuous questioning during almost thirty hours in jail, William Lee on Friday night made a written statement, in which he said he killed his father, Richard Lee, in self-defence, after the father had murdered his wife and younger son, Clarence.

The bodies of Lee's father, mother and brother were found in their burning home on Thursday and Lee was charged with their murder. After his statement Sheriff Scales, fearing the prisoner would be lynched, secretly took him in an automobile to Evansville.

A Wonderful Flight.

Mourmelon, France, Aug. 28.—M. Helles, a young French aviator, yesterday broke the record for a single long distance flight in competition for the Michelin Cup. He covered 1,200 kilometres (746 miles) in fifteen hours. The previous record for the Michelin Cup was made by Jules Vedrines last year, when he covered 800 kilometres (496.8 miles) in seven hours, 56 minutes and 36 seconds. Helles flew over a measured course and landed at Chalons-Sur-Marne.

REGULARS DEFEAT THE PETS BY A 12-4 SCORE

When Cresswell and his men were through with Brydie's Pets on Saturday afternoon the score stood 12 to 4 against "Happy's" followers. The game was a fairly good exhibition in places, but Cresswell had the Pets at his mercy at all stages. There were about one hundred fans present. Umpire Dorris had something new to contend with, in the shape of a genial drunk who persisted in taking his turn at the bat in spite of the demonstrances of the players, and his Umpa. He was given a chance and proceeded around the line, still under the impression that he was one of the invaluable members of the team. The "booze" soon had its turn, however, and later he was to be seen enjoying a siesta in the fence corner.

Cresswell had ten strikeouts to his credit, and allowed four singles, but they were not bunched. Rahmel, on the other side, had lots of speed, but lacked the control. He also struck out ten men and allowed three hits. The loose playing on the part of some of his team mates was partly the cause of the large score.

Some of the regulars were absent, and a couple of the others were changed around, M. O'Brien doing the receiving and Gonter guarding the initial sack. The change did not make any material difference in the efficiency of the team.

In the right garden, Callahan was used to advantage. He secured two of the three hits off Rahmel, and scored one run. Acting Manager Dorris was giving him a workout and he made good.

Brydie persuaded Chris. Graham to operate on the initial sack, but he was called away in the fifth innings. He handled everything with the same accuracy that characterized his playing in his balmy days. Unlike Jim Jeffries, he "came back". George Minorgan patrolled at short for "Happy" and was in fine form. He will likely be seen in action again on Labour Day, when the Belleville Grand Trunks play the locals.

Manager Quinlan is still holidaying, but will be here for Monday's game. "Jimmy" O'Hearne did not join in the fray on Saturday either, and W. O'Brien played at second. He made several slip-ups during the game, as did some of the others, as the eleven errors will testify.

The score by innings was as follows:

Regulars .. ..50002038*—	12	3	11
Pets .. ..010010020—	4	4	14

LABOUR DAY PROGRAMME LOOKS LIKE BEST YET

The Labour Day sports, under the auspices of the Trades and Labour Council will be the attraction on the holiday. They have a first-class programme of athletic sports, and judging from the way the entries are coming in, it looks like "some doings" at Riverside Park on Labour Day. There were a lot of entries turned in on Saturday, some from out of town and many of the local athletes will avail themselves of the opportunity of trying their skill with the men from the farm.

The tug-of-war between different teams of the city will furnish some excitement, as there are some dark horses in the tug-of-war. The quoit throwers are busy these days getting in some additional practise for the Labour Day Tournament, and Chief Howard's men will need to see to it that they do not lose their reputation as quoiters. Altogether it looks like a big day for everybody. The ball game alone will be worth going a long way to see, and the local boys are just about due to wreck the reputation of the Belleville Railroaders next time out.

Great Interest In The Y.M.C.A. Aquatic Sports

Judging from the many favourable comments which have been passed about the Peterborough Aquatic championships, which will be held on Saturday, Sept. 9th, there promises to be an unusual amount of interest taken in these contests. The exact location has not yet been chosen, but it is the intention of the committee to hold these events at some convenient place, where the spectators will be quite close to the course, and a first-class view obtained.

The events are all open to residents of Peterborough, and the winner of each event will be considered the City Champion.

The canoe singles and fours will, no doubt, draw large entries, also the swimming events. It will be seen that the programme is not extensive, yet it contains events enough to give everybody a chance to get in on one or more events. In the event of these sports proving successful, it is the intention to make this an annual affair.

Following is the programme:
100 yards swim, any style.
50 yards' swim, any style, (junior.)
440 yards' swim, any style.
220 yards' swim, any style, junior.
Canoe, singles.
Canoe, fours.
Life saving competition.

Further information may be obtained from J. J. Thompson, at the Y. M. C. A., who is secretary of the committee.

BALL GAME ENDS IN FISTIC ENCOUNTER

DUFFERIN PARK, AUG. 28.—A fist fight between two Dufferin players, Puddy and Acheson, ended a burlesque ball game here Saturday in the City Amateur League doubleheader.

Dufferins made such a mess of things that the five hundred fans were disgusted with them, and they finally became disgusted with themselves and hot words between the players led to blows.

Finally, when Wellingtons were at bat in the fourth, Puddy and Acheson suddenly rushed at each other, punching and clinching, and each landed several blows before they could be pulled apart by the umpire and the other players.

Then Umpire Dinny McGuire called the game and announced to the crowd that it was awareded to Wellingtons, 9 to 0.

President Ed. Mack was in the press stand when the fight occurred, and he pronounced it a disgraceful finish to a burlesque game. Several of the spectators expressed the opinion that this season should finish the Dufferins with the City Amateur League.

Wellingtons, by to-day's win, have practically cinched their hold on the championship, and they will make a big bid to hold the Daily Star cup in this league.

McIntosh started to twirl for the Dufferins, but he was batted all over the lot, and Kelly succeeded him in the second.

Dufferin's two errors do not indicate how bad their play was. They had a bunch of wild throws and passed balls, and several hits that should have been singles, went for extra bases.

O'Toole's walk and steal of second with Graham's single scored Wellington's first run. Then Ross smashed one that Kelly misjudged, and it went for a homer, Graham chasing home ahead of Ross. Then Curson came along with a slashing hit over the centre field fence for a clean homer. Burns got a hit, but was left on first.

Nevins singled in the second, was sacrificed by Atcheson, and came home on McGowan's double past Ross in centre.

Hits by Hawkins, O'Toole, Graham and Ross netted three more in the second for Wellingtons. Graham went all the way from first to the plate on Ross' single, while Kelly held the ball, not thinking he would attempt it; Curson slammed a hot one that went through Grogen for a triple, and McIntosh was benched, while Kelly came in from right field to do the twirling. Wellingtons got another cheap run in the third, when Hawkins was hit by one of Spence's slants, and got all the way around on three passed balls.

In the fourth they got another quartet on a combination of hits, passed balls, steals, and double steals.

HOLDING HIS BARLEY UNTIL PACT PASSES

Special to The Examiner.

NAPANEE, ONT., AUG. 28.—Stewart Craven, a farmer of East Fredericksburg, in Lennox and Addington county, has two thousand bushels of barley in his barn. He refused to sell it until after the election, waiting for reciprocity to pass. By holding his barley until that date he counts upon making clear six hundred dollars extra profit on his crop, saving 50 cents a bushel. Mr. Craven is but one instance, there are many others in this section. The region of the Bay of Quinte raises some of the finest barley in America and seventy-five thousand bushels a year have been going to Oswego under the present tariff. The brewers of New York state insist upon a per centage of Canadian barley to obtain a flavour for their products which inferior barley of their own state cannot supply.

Earl Grey at the Toronto Exhibition Makes a Special Plea for the School Teachers of Dominion

AN IMPORTANT SPEECH

Toronto, Aug. 29.—The thirty-third annual season of the Canadian National Exhibition was officially declared open yesterday afternoon. Earl Grey, attended by a number of Toronto's notables, performed the time-honored ceremony in the auditorium of the dairy building, which was crowded to capacity, with an audience who listened appreciately to the remarks of the Governor-General and George H. Gooderham, M.P.P., the president of the exhibition. Countess Grey with Lady Sybil Grey and Lady Evelyn Grey was also present.

His Excellency was the guest of honor at two important functions, being present at the directors' luncheon and taking the leading part in the official opening ceremonies. He made short addresses on both occasions, expressing the greatest appreciation of the treatment he had received at the hands of Canadians in general and Torontonians in particular.

Earl Grey particularly urged the immediate inclusion of the old fort withing the exhibition grounds, and the maintenance of certain of the buildings as a permanent, open exhibit for educational purposes.

At the directors' luncheon the toast to His Majesty King George was proposed by President Gooderham; that to the Governor-General by W. K. George.

In his reply Earl Grey expressed his appreciation of Mr. George's remarks.

Turning to the educational influences of the exhibition and to the status of educational institutions in the province, Earl Grey said every aid should be given to enhance the educational facilities of the province. The teachers should be the best money could procure and they should be well compensated. He said "Economy in school teachers is the very last economy to which a wise and prudent people in any country will descend. We should get the best teachers to interest the children and teach them how to think for themselves, not merely to mechanically recite."

After luncheon His Excellency was joined by the Countess Grey, with the Ladies Sybil and Evelyn, who had luncheon at the women's building, being guests of the wives of the directors. The whole party then repaired to the dairy building for the official and formal opening. On the platform with the Governor-General were: Lieutenant-Governor Gibson, Bishop Sweeny, President Gooderham, Mayor Geary, W. K. George, ex-Mayor Oliver, W. K. McNaught, M.P.P.

Proceedings were opened with prayer by Bishop Sweeny, after which President Gooderham, on behalf of the directors, presented His Excellency with an illuminated address.

A full-dress rehearsal took the place of the scheduled show before the grand stand in the evening.

Yesterday evening the exhibition grounds put on the appearance of fairy land. The Hydro-Electric forces turned the current on to thirty thousand lamps which outlined the various buildings and illuminated the roadways through the park.

FIVE LIVES WERE LOST

Charleston and Savannah Are Swept by a Storm Which Does Damage Amounting to $1,000,000

THE CROPS SUFFER

Charleston, S.C., Aug. 28, via Summerville, S.C., Aug. 29.—As a result of a freak storm which struck this city and Savannah, Ga., last night and which reached hurricane proportions, Charleston virtually has been isolated for 24 hours. Five persons are known to have been killed near here, and property losses, it is estimated, will reach $1,000,000.

The wind velocity increased from 40 miles an hour at 1.25 p.m., to 94 miles at 10.20 p.m., when the wind gauge was put out of adjustment.

The tide was something over eight feet during the storm, three feet short of 1893. The waters have caused washouts on the approaches to the Union Station, preventing the operation of trains.

Alonso Coburn, an engineer on the Charleston division of the Southern Railway, was instantly killed by flying timbers. A man named Smith of Columbia, and Motorman Custer of the local street railway system, were killed, two men seriously injured when a trestle collapsed, and two unidentified women were drowned when their home was flooded. Several negroes are also reported among the storm victims.

Great damage is feared for the rice and sea-island cotton industries by the rise of the tide. Not since the cyclone of 1885 has the water front here suffered so severely.

Anxiety for the people marooned on Sullivan Island was relieved yesterday afternoon, when a steamer came in with a load of excursionists and residents from the island. The island was completely flooded, houses were inundated and the people had harrowing experiences. Two schooners and small steamers were either sunk or damaged and had it not been for splendid rescue work by soldiers at Fort Moultrie the death list would have been appalling.

Five Were Killed.

Regina, Aug. 29.—Of six men who were sitting on the rear-end of a Grand Trunk Pacific caboose when it was sent crashing into a flat car at an early hour yesterday morning, two were instantly killed. The names are yet unknown. Four were seriously injured and three of them have since died. The three were L. H. Fortin, a French-Canadian, from Lynn, Mass.; Mike Griffiths, an Englishman, from Prescott, Lancashire, and Albert Marsal, a French-Canadian, from Montreal. Another of the four, seriously injured, is dying. His name is James Christy, a Scotchman, from Glasgow.

Murdered Mayor and Family.

London, Aug. 29.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—A Rome special says that terrible cholera riots have been taking place at Verbicaro in Calabria. The superstitious populace, believing that the authorities to combat the spread of the epidemic were really the cause of the epidemic itself, arose in their wrath and murdered Mayor Signor Guarasna and massacred all the members of his household.

ONTARIO TOUR ENDS.

Mr. Borden Addresses 2,000 Persons in Brockville.

Brockville, Aug. 29.—The Conservative leader finished his Ontario tour here last night. Two thousand persons were present.

He began by comparing the standards of life in Canada and the U. S. "That," he said, "is one reason why we should not wish to exchange our present standards for theirs." He went on to refer to Sir Wilfrid's statement in Quebec that the Government is "Like the Kingdom of Heaven." "In the Bible we read," he said, "that in the Kingdom of Heaven 'neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and thieves do not break through nor steal.' I venture to think that perhaps that is one difference between the Government and the Kingdom of Heaven, which will strike the observer who has watched the history of the Government during the past ten years."

Mr. Borden proceeded to point to the great prosperity of New Ontario and its great possibilities. "Much," he said, "has been done by the provincial Government to place before intending immigrants the advantages of this northern country, but the Dominion Government has treated this greater Ontario with almost absolute neglect and disregard. The Liberal-Conservative party if returned to power will see that New Ontario receives its just and full share of attention, and that its wonderful natural advantages are brought to the attention of the world in an effective manner and by efficient methods."

Search For "Mona Lisa."

Cherbourg, Aug. 29.—In connection with the search for the painting "Mona Lisa," which disappeared last Monday from Louvre at Paris, the port police here have reported to the Paris headquarters that on Wednesday last two persons, one of them small and dark, carrying two framed canvases by a wooden panel sailed aboard the Kaiser Wilhelm II. for New York. They think that possibly the panel was the painting of "Mona Lisa."

Rome, Aug. 29.—Visitors to the gallery at Villi Carlotta, on Lake Como, have recently remarked the disappearance of a fine copy of the painting "Mona Lisa" executed during the lifetime of Leonardo da Vinci. No one knows what has become of it, and the newspapers suggest a connection between its disappearance and the original from the Louvre.

Longshoremen Out of Work.

Montreal, Aug. 29.—Upwards of six hundred longshoremen are this week practically thrown out of work on account of the labor difficulties in England, which have resulted in the cancellation and non-arrival in port this week of many of the large steamers.

Never in the history of the port, it is said by those whose daily work keeps them on the waterfront, have conditions been so bad as they are just now, and it is felt that with large families to support many of the dock laborers and workers will be the real sufferers through circumstances over which they have no control.

"All of last week," declared a longshoreman yesterday, "we had little or nothing to do. Some of the ships going out took no cargo and the couple that came in were such small boats that fifty men were able to do all the work required."

Western Crops Not Hurt.

Winnipeg, Aug. 29.—Renewed anxiety was expressed yesterday morning over the safety of standing crops in consequence of frosts, which occurred Saturday and Sunday nights. Beyond some damage to tender varieties of ground products, no ill results are yet apparent. The wheat market, which is a most sensitive barometer of western crop conditions, declined yesterday to consider that damage had been done to wheat. In consequence the market declined five-eighths of a cent. Four points of frost was the lowest temperature recorded in the past 48 hours. Yesterday it was mostly clear and cool with a few local showers. Harvesting received a temporary setback through the showers of Sunday and Saturday. Twenty-four hundred harvest hands have arrived from Eastern Canada since midnight Sunday.

Dropped Dead.

Niagara Falls, Aug. 29.—Mrs. J. E. Hutchens dropped dead at her home yesterday afternoon from heart failure. She is survived by her husband one daughter, Miss Maude Hutchens and two sons, Bert of Chicago and Walter of this city.

TELLS HIS STORY.

McGillicuddy Gets Indifferent Hearing in Centre York.

Toronto, Aug. 29.—Dan McGillicuddy had his turn at a meeting of Centre York electors at Humber Bay last night. He was there to tell the people about his charges against Hon. Frank Oliver, the substance of which has already been published.

About 300 men and women were crowded into Devin's Hall.

Mr. McGillicuddy was interrupted time and time again. Dr. Forbes Godfrey, M.P.P., pleaded and threatened. Finally his appeal to give one more chance took the wrong course and a score of men made a rush at the main interruptor, and, to the accompaniment of cries, "Put him in the Humber," he made a speedy but inglorious exodus.

Mr. McGillicuddy's speech was virtually a condensation of a letter addressed to Sir Wilfrid Laurier, under date of July 8 last. During the course of his remarks Mr. McGillicuddy made no attempt to state where the money in question originated, but confined himself to the statement that in 1907 a "slush fund" for the Liberal party was raised in New York, and the member of the Government who went down to deal with the fund was Hon. Frank Oliver.

Mr. McGillicuddy disclaimed any desire for reward. His answer to Sir Wilfrid's question, "What do you want?" was that Frank Oliver should retire from the Cabinet and give way to a man who retained the confidence of the people, suggesting Dr. Michael Clark, Red Deer, Alta., as a fitting person. That letter hastened dissolution, he declared, because Sir Wilfrid, when in trouble, was always disposed to leave the matter in the hands of the party and the country.

BRIEFS FROM THE WIRES.

London (Eng.) police have agitated for and received an increase in pay.

Thomas Brown of Markdale was thrown from his cart and dragged between the wheels and killed.

Arthur B. Wilson will run as Independent candidate in Wentworth, making two Wilsons in the contest.

Word of a third outbreak of the dreaded foot and mouth disease in England reached the Dominion Department of Agriculture.

H. Stanislas Harwood, ex-M.P. for Vaudreuil, and for the past seven years postmaster of Montreal, died last night after an illness of nine months.

Redmond Barry, Attorney-General of Ireland, has been appointed Lord Chancellor of Ireland, successor to Sir Samuel Walker, who died at Dublin on Aug. 13.

The death is announced of Dr. Rainy, M.P. for Kilmarnock, son of the famous Scotch divine, Principal Rainy. Hemorrhage of the brain was the cause of death.

The Seventh Battery of the Third London Brigade, with 64 points, won the King's Prize. Second place was won by the First Edinburgh Battery, Lowland Brigades. Canada was seventh.

A sneak thief operating at the Kingston market is causing farmers a great deal of trouble. It is believed that the culprit is a woman. Chickens, butter, eggs and vegetables have been missed.

Mrs. C. E. Keene, 125 Soudan avenue, North Toronto, who was burned last week by her clothes catching fire while cooking on the stove, succumbed to her injuries at ten o'clock yesterday morning.

Shot Himself Through Head.

New York, Aug. 29.—Standing on the corner of New and Beaver streets yesterday, Arthur Veit, connected with the Standard Oil Co., where his father, Richard C., is one of the managers, committed suicide by shooting himself through the head.

Young Veit was employed in the shipping department of the company. The young man, without a word, left his work and went to the street, where he pulled a revolver from his pocket and fired a shot through his head.

The police found many letters and papers in his pockets, and through these his identity was established. They found no note explaining the act.

Found Dead in Well.

Hamilton, Aug. 29.—Between 4 and 5 o'clock yesterday evening a man named Blunt, who resided at Kenilworth, was found dead in a well in the rear of his house, and it is supposed that he was overcome with a dizzy fit, to which he was subject, and fell in head first.

LOYAL TO CHIEFTAIN

St. John Gives Sir Wilfrid a Splendid Welcome—8,000 People Struggle for Places in Big Rink

AN ELOQUENT ADDRESS

St. John, N.B., Aug. 29.—Last night's demonstration tendered to Sir Wilfrid Laurier was a wonderful spectacle. Six bands and sixty illuminated automobiles escorted the Premier to the rink, followed by some 2,000 torch and flag bearers. The rink, which seats over 5,000, was literally jammed with humanity an hour before the procession arrived. It is estimated that 3,000 were crowded in, and at least 3,000 outside fought with frenzy to get near the doors.

The Premier was never in better form. Despite the arduous campaigning of the past two weeks he declared he never felt better, and his voice is unaffected by the strain upon it.

Sir Wilfrid said he had come to the Maritime Provinces to preach reciprocity. There was apparently little need for any campaign of education here. The people knew what they wanted and why they wanted it. He noted that the Conservative paper had stated that it was true that Sir John Macdonald and other leaders of the past had favored reciprocity in their day, but added they were dead now. "I'm sorry to say that it is true," he observed.

Amid a roar of wild applause Sir Wilfrid Laurier thus concluded the address:

"To you, my fellow-countrymen of New Brunswick, I now appeal. The issue is in the hands of the Canadian people. Let New Brunswick do as she did last time; let Quebec do the same—and she will do it, let me tell you—(applause); let Ontario do as she did—and I hear she will do better—(loud applause) — and within three months the great boon of reciprocity will be ours. I appeal to you to support a policy of moderation and conciliation in developing a united Canadian nationhood. I appeal to you against the unholy alliance of the Nationalists in Quebec and the jingoes in the other provinces. In my own province I am branded by the trumpets and organs of Bourassa and his allies as a traitor to the French race. In other provinces I am denounced by the jingoes as a traitor to the Empire. What I have sought to be is a true Canadian and a true British subject. I have kept the double connection before me throughout the whole of my public service. It has been to me my cloud by day and my pillar of fire by night. I have followed its leading, earnestly, faithfully, and, I hope, nay, I believe, with happy results, to the best development of the highest lines of our Dominion. I thank you for the four times you have endorsed that aim by your votes, and I depend upon you, I am sure, as sure as I am of the verdict of my own province of Quebec, for the renewal triumph of that policy on September 21."

In Nicolet.

Beauchour, Que., Aug. 29.—Dr. Gustave Turcotte, ex-M.P. for Nicolet, was again nominated by the Liberals to contest the division at the convention yesterday afternoon.

To Oppose Verville.

Montreal, Aug. 29.—Ald. Noe Laclaire last night received the Conservative nomination in Maisonneuve to oppose Alphonse Verville, M.P.

Better May Run.

Vancouver, Aug. 29.—There is a well-defined report abroad to-day that Rev. Dr. Fraser of the First Presbyterian Church, will resign the pastorate and will be the independent Conservative candidate in the coming election.

Sir William Whyte Retires.

Winnipeg, Aug. 29.—Sir William Whyte, who for the past quarter of a century have been in control of the western lines of the Canadian Pacific, will terminate his connection with the company in this capacity at the end of September. He will continue to serve the company as a director, having decided that he should be honored in this manner. The announcement was made by the president of the road at a dinner given by the latter in honor of the retiring official at the Manitoba Club last night.

Sir Thomas Shaughnessy, at the conclusion of the function, stated that the matter has not been discussed. He also stated that no decision had been reached in the matter of the location of the new western shops.

Killed Whole Family.

South Thomaston, Me., Aug. 29.—Grief over the death of his wife led Edward Bennett, a graduate of Oxford University, England, who had been a resident of this town for the past six years, to murder his three children and then take his own life yesterday. Two of the children were killed by the use of chloroform and the third by cyanide of potassium and chloroform.

Fell Down Shaft.

Port Colborne, Aug. 29.—A young man about 17 years old, named William Bitterman, was instantly killed yesterday by falling down one of the shafts of the Maple Leaf Flouring Mill. His parents are farmers, living a few miles east of town.

Investigate "Martin" Wreck.

Ottawa, Aug. 29.—The Marine Department has instructed Capt Demers, wreck commissioner, who is now at Quebec, to proceed to Georgian Bay as soon as his Quebec hearing is completed and investigate the loss of the tug Martin, which foundered last week near Point au Baril.

The Department has been informed that the captain of the tug, who escaped with his life, neglected to report the wreck at the customs, as, under the regulations, it was his duty to do. The conduct of the captain will be investigated.

Dostard Court a Farce.

Montreal, Aug. 29.—Stopping in the middle of a record day's work, Recorder Weir yesterday declared before a crowded court that the administration of justice, under such conditions as he was obliged to mete out, was nothing more than a farce. With over 120 cases on the local court's list, crowds of people jammed the corridor of the City Hall yesterday morning during the recorder's court session.

The members of the bar have decided to elect a committee of four members to wait upon the council of the bar of Montreal and report to it the condition of the recorder's court at the present time.

Charged With Manslaughter.

Hamilton, Aug. 29.—W. J. Waters was yesterday served with a summons to appear in the police court here on the charge next to answer a charge of manslaughter. Waters is the man who ran down William Boyce with a motor car on Main street east one day last August, receiving such serious injuries that he died in the City Hospital the next day. The coroner's jury at the inquest into the matter found that the car was traveling at an excessive rate of speed when it struck Boyce, and the charge of manslaughter has been laid against Waters by the local police as a result of the verdict.

His Barns Burned.

Cornwall, Aug. 29.—The up-to-date barns of D. W. Hope at Summerstown, ten miles below Cornwall, were completely destroyed by fire Sunday afternoon, together with the end of the season's crops. The horses in the barn were got out safely, as well as some of the farm implements, but a piggery near the barn was also destroyed, along with a good many valuable porkers. Spontaneous combustion is supposed to have been the cause of the fire. The loss is about $4,000. Mr. Hope carried $1,000 insurance.

Murdered With an Axe.

Winnipeg, Aug. 29.—A special despatch from Castor, Alta., says: While suffering from what is believed to have been a fit of temporary insanity, a young homesteader named F. Carlson, residing near Hamilton Lake, 20 miles southwest of Castor, is supposed to have slain a neighbor named R. Merritt by striking him on the head with an axe as he lay sleeping in his bunk in the early morning.

PEOPLE'S PULPIT.

Sermon by CHARLES T. RUSSELL Pastor Brooklyn Tabernacle.

FOES THREATEN CHRISTIAN FAITH

Banner of Infidelity Raised Inside the Church—Higher Criticism Peril.

Richmond, Va., Aug. 27.—Pastor Russell of Brooklyn Tabernacle preached here to-day under the auspices of the International Bible Students Association (Local Branch—unsectarian), composed of the truth-hungry from all denominations. Asked why such great crowds always attend his addresses, while the churches of all denominations are complaining of slim attendance, Pastor Russell replied, "The people are thinking. Perplexed by the infidelity and Higher Criticism taught in the principal colleges and pulpits, many desire to have an interpretation of the Bible consistent with itself and not at war with the reverential exercise of reason. The Scriptures foretell of our day, saying, 'There shall be a famine in the land; not a faming for bread nor a thirst for water, but for the hearing of the Word of the Lord' (Amos viii. 11). No fairy tales can thoroughly satisfy intelligent thinkers, whose numbers are increasing. Many of those who attend my services and many who read my sermons in the public print long since ceased to attend the church services."

Two services were held, one for the public, considering the great "Hereafter"; the other, which we report, had for its text God's call to Cain, after he had slain his brother, "Where is Thy Brother?" and Cain's reply, "Am I My Brother's Keeper?" (Genesis iv. 9.) The speaker said in part:—

No one can dispute that individualism, personal independence, personal responsibility, has done much for the development of our race. The serfdom and paternalism of the past were unfavorable to individual thought, responsibility and action. No wise and good man would desire to rob his fellows of independence of mind.

We are in danger, however, of going to the opposite extreme—in danger of carrying the subject of personal independence too far—in danger of neglecting some who should have assistance—in danger of thinking of all men as being not only free but equal. While we all should have proper freedom of will, yet all are more or less handicapped in the exercise of the will. As St. Paul said, "We cannot do the things which we would." We are slaves of sin and death, some more and some less. The Prophet David's explanation applies to us all, "I was shapen in iniquity, in sin did my mother conceive me" (Psalm li, 5).

It was in view of such inequalities of the flesh that St. Paul wrote to the Church, "We that are strong should bear with the infirmities of the weak, and not please ourselves (merely)" (Romans xv, 1). This principle, applied by the Apostle to the Church, would certainly be appropriate and beneficial in the natural family. And as our hearts enlarge we should all come to realise more and more the oneness, the solidarity of our race—the entire human family, of which St. Paul says, "Of one blood God created all men, to dwell upon the face of the whole earth" (Acts xvii, 26).

God's inquiry of Cain implied Cain's responsibility, and teaches us a lesson respecting our responsibility in God's sight for one another. We will begin with the Church, the highest type of brotherhood imaginable: We should not be content to split into sects and parties. Whatever was the ignorance of the past, which led to the formation of the various creeds and denominations, there can be no excuse for these now, because Christians of all denominations have come to discredit the old creeds. Should there not, then, be a movement toward heart unity and [illegible] outside of denominational and creedal lines, amongst those who recognize God as Father, the Lord Jesus Christ as the Redeemer, and the Bible as the Divine Revelation?

It is not proper to say as did Cain, "Am I my brother's keeper?" Every true Christian should realise that to-day Christianity is being assaulted in its own House and by its professed friends. In the universities, colleges and seminaries of all denominations a battle is raging, which threatens the destruction of our Christian faith. Possibly a few are blind to the situation, but the insurgents—the Higher Critics and Evolutionists—realise the situation and are craftily saying to the people, "We are the Watchmen upon the walls of Zion! Hearken to our cry: All is well!" These Higher Critics seem to have no conscience. They claim that the people must be gradually taken by guile. They encourage them to "sleep," while they raise over them the banner of infidelity called Higher Criticism.

Many who see the killing of this antitypical Abel shirk the responsibility by saying, "Am I my brother's keeper?" not realising that from the Divine standpoint they have a responsibility toward every other Christian with whom they are in contact. They should realise that loyalty to God means that they "should show forth the praises of Him who hath called us out of darkness into his marvelous light."

In a word, every true Christian who has made a full consecration of himself to the Lord, to walk in the footsteps of the Saviour, should waken to the fact that we are in a critical time. We are in the time mentioned by St. Paul, when "every man's work shall be tried so as by fire" (1. Corinthians iii, 13). The testing will be along the lines both of faith and of works. Only those holding firmly to "the faith once delivered to the saints" will be able to bring forth such fruits, such good works, as the testings of this hour require. This class, awake to their responsibility toward God and the brethren and the Bible, and full of zeal therefore, will thereby be kept in this "evil day." God will bless them in their endeavors to glorify Him.

In the days of slavery and serfdom, every master, every feudal lord, recognised a responsibility for his servants or slaves. He was interested in their health and in their morals, for they were his property, and any depreciation meant financial loss to him. Thus selfish interest kept him alive to his responsibility, to a considerable degree. But now all that has changed. Serfs and slaves, released from obligation, are without supervision and care. The less fit of our race are in serious danger of being crowded to the wall. Our lawmakers have recognised the fact and have thrown around the weaker sex and children safeguards in the laws, protecting them from designing people who would exploit them for selfish purposes.

Nevertheless, with all that human law has yet been able to accomplish, the danger is increased. As knowledge increases, trusts and combinations selfishly boost the price of life's necessities and luxuries. Those members of our race less favorably equipped for the battle of life are seriously disadvantaged, some by reason of less intellectual powers, others by reason of unfavorable circumstances and environments.

Under such conditions it is not surprising that all who are able are banding together into unions for their own protection; nor should it surprise us that these, also, selfish and hard of heart, should sometimes be unjust in their demands, and sometimes cruel and ready to slay their brother who joins them not in their organization. In their desire to promote the best interests of their craft they may, indeed, reasonably exhort fellow-craftsmen to support the organization, and may show its advantages, but beyond that they dare not go without infracting the principles of justice and bringing Divine condemnation which, sooner or later, in one way or another, will surely be meted out.

Seen from this standpoint, unionism has a responsibility toward brethren not members of the union—to treat them justly, kindly, helpfully. And no doubt this attitude would bring the larger blessing and truer prosperity.

Gradually the world is realising its responsibility to the weak and incompetent and aged. The Orphanages, Hospitals, Homes for the Poor, etc., are all proper recognitions of the brotherhood of man—aside from the higher brotherhood in Christ. We cannot claim that these institutions are the product of pure benevolence. We must admit that politics has much to do with them. The desire for contracts and for labor in connection with these institutions, has, of course, much to do with their existence. The expenditure of such enormous sums as annually go to these institutions naturally enough draws an army of political heelers and onlookers.

The All-Seeing eye of our Creator keeps watch over the affairs of His creatures to-day as it kept watch over Abel's interests. God allowed Cain to have his way; allowed him to kill his brother; allowed the righteous to suffer; yet Cain did not escape, but was held accountable for the death of his brother. God's sentence upon him separated him from his brethren until he cried out that his punishment was greater than he could bear. And, similarly, we may be sure that the Cain class of our day will be held accountable for the wilful slaying of their brother, especially to the extent that the brother despised may be a child of God. As God declared that the blood of Abel cried to Him from the ground—cried for justice—so the intimation of the Scriptures is that all injustice of every kind, everywhere will bring a "just recompense of reward."

St. James figuratively represents the laborers, the toilers in the field of labor to-day, as crying out to God, and as being heard, and its resulting in a great "time of trouble," in which the great, the mighty and the rich shall weep bitterly (James v, 1). As these are not the union men, generally, who are crying out at the present time, we may look more especially amongst those on the outside; but the lesson is that those who suffer oppression will ultimately have Divine power exercised in their defence and for their relief. St. James intimates that this release will come to this class at the coming of Messiah, in power and great glory, for the establishment of His Kingdom of Righteousness in the world. To those who are the Lord's people he says, "Have patience, brethren, for the coming of the Lord draweth nigh." The Lord speaks of this "Day of Recompense" as a "time of trouble"—of the overthrow of oppression, the uplifting of the poor and those that have no helper (Psalms lxxii, 12).

Those who are entirely satisfied with present conditions are the comparatively few who have special advantages. The masses are discontented—some of them properly so, and others of them more discontented than is reasonable. All but the very poorest and worst situated are better off to-day than were their grandfathers—yet less contented. The spirit of discontent, selfishness and a failure to note and to enjoy the great blessings which God has provided so bountifully, as well as wonderfully, in our day, prevails. Nevertheless, some have reason for discontent; and some, looking into the future, are fearing worse conditions, as the monopolies have gained a firmer grip upon all the necessities of life.

Surely their forebodings are not without grounds. Unless something shall occur to lift matters out of their present rut, human intelligence sees, at a not far distant day, a new serfdom, with masters directing all the forces of the world, and with the common people at their mercy, glad to have a sufficiency of work and of wage for life's necessities.

Long ago the speaker harbored the theory taught him in his creed, that mankind is totally depraved, but surely none are totally depraved except the idiotic. The speaker believed that there is an element favorable to righteousness in every member of our race, and that sin is largely the result of unfavorable environments; and that the majority of mankind would be glad, indeed, if some Divine interposition were to lift them and their affairs out of present conditions and put them upon a plane of absolute righteousness, justice, equity. This, the speaker believes, is the desire of a large element in every nation, a predominating class. Such a reign of righteouness, justice, equity in the world, will speedily result, he said, from the establishment of Messiah's Kingdom, for which we pray, "Thy Kingdom come; Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven."

Most explicitly do the Scriptures declare this, saying, "The desire of all nations shall come" (Haggai ii, 7). This declaration is in conjunction with the foretelling of the establishment of Messiah's Kingdom. The reign of righteousness which it will inaugurate will be the ideal of the masses of mankind, although quite probably the overthrow of Trusts and Combines will, for a time, not be viewed sympathetically by the rich, the wise, the preferred, the favored class, under present conditions. As it required time for the slave holders of the past to become reconciled to the loss of their slaves and to see the righteousness of their being freed, so it will be with those who at present are closely identified with great institutions which are bringing mankind into slavery. Our Lord sized up the situation, saying, Blessed are you who weep and mourn, for you shall be comforted. Woe unto those who are full, for they shall have distress (Luke vi, 21, 25).

The reign of justice and righteousness will ultimately appeal to all in heart harmony with Jehovah, and all who fail to thus come into heart harmony with Him will be accounted unworthy of His gift of everlasting life; for "He who loves not his brother whom he hath seen, how could he love God whom he hath not seen?"

The thousand years of Messiah's reign, during which His Bride, the Elect Church, will be associated with Him, will be quite sufficient for the equalization of all of life's affairs for the entire race. "In His day shall the righteous flourish," and not the merely strong. In His Day evil doers and not well doers will be crushed. It is written of His Kingdom that it "shall lift up the poor out of the dunghill, and shall bring down the mighty from their seats."

The whole world of mankind will [illegible] into the hands of Messiah, who will term them just as they are. They will be in various conditions. Some will be more depraved; others less depraved; some will be more seared in their consciences and some less; and these deficiencies of character will depend upon the way in which each one accepted or rejected light and opportunity in the present time. Those who knew not His will and did it not will receive few stripes; those who knew His will and did it not will receive many stripes, because of previous hardening of character. Everybody will be required, eventually, to come up to the full standard of Divine requirements. Those more depraved will have greater difficulty and those less depraved will have less difficulty and receive fewer stripes, in the coming up to Divine requirements.

Those who most willingly and most gladly assent to the leveling process will most quickly receive the Divine blessing and make the most rapid progress along the Highway of Holiness, back to full human perfection and eternal life. And those who now, in advance of the establishment of the Kingdom, love righteousness and hate iniquity, come at present into favor with the King of kings, and thus are specially favored with light and knowledge, and are invited to become associates with Messiah in His glorious Kingdom, which is to effect the long-promised, great reformation of earth's affairs. Let us all take to heart and apply well this lesson, but especially those who have heard and who have responded to the Divine invitation to become heirs of God and joint-heirs with our Redeemer.

The Air Is Germ Laden

In the Springtime—Disease is Ready to Make You a Victim When the Blood is Thin

Rich, Red Blood is the Greatest of Germicides—You Can Get the Blood Right by Using

DR. CHASE'S NERVE FOOD

When the blood is rich and red, when it is largely composed of red corpuscles, there is little chance for disease germs. They cannot thrive in the system which is filled with good blood.

But in the spring the blood is generally thin, weak and watery. It lacks the vitalizing red corpuscles and you become an easy prey to the germs of disease which seem to lurk everywhere at this time of year.

You can fortify yourself against the germs of disease by using Dr. Chase's Nerve Food. This great restorative treatment forms new, red corpuscles in the blood, makes the blood rich, red and healthy.

Weakness, tired feelings, stomach derangements and disorders of the nervous system soon disappear when Dr. Chase's Nerve Food is used.

This medicine cures by the building-up process, and for this reason its benefits are lasting. Nearly everybody needs something in the spring to enrich the blood and tone up the system, and it would be impossible to get a more satisfactory spring tonic than Dr. Chase's Nerve Food. 50c. a box, 6 for $2.50, at all dealers or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto.

Actor, Aviator, and Soldier.

The story of the career of Mr Robert Loraine, one of the most prominent aviators in Great Britain, is romantic to a degree. Mr. Loraine, as the son of that fine old actor, Henry Loraine, has not only earned fame and popularity behind the footlights and achieved some remarkable flying feats, but he has also served his country as a soldier. He joined, as a trooper, the Welsh Imperial Yeomanry, and first acted as one of a squadron of mounted infantry. After that he exchanged into a machine-gun section. Then he was promoted to be a corporal, and was placed in charge of a Colt machine gun. That the actor-soldier-aviator served well was testified by the fact that he was twice offered commissions.

Queer Nesting Place.

On the arrival at Aberdeen of a goods train from Carlisle, a thrush's nest, containing one egg, was found underneath a fish van. It rested securely in a corner beside the buffer spring beneath the wagon, and there it had remained during the long journey north, despite the strong draught caused by the motion of the train.

Territorial Strength

Colonel Seely, Under-Secretary for War, gave the following figures of the Territorial Force:—Officers, 9,606; men, 259,983. The net decrease in a year has been 2,281 officers and men.

Used the Royal Arms

William Buckland, a horse-dealer, who was ordered to pay the costs of a summons for using the Royal arms without authority, promised the High Wycombe magistrates to paint the arms out.

Silver Thrones for Their Majesties

Two thrones of solid silver, embellished with the most delicate and cunning work of Indian craftsmanship, are to be constructed at the Calcutta Mint for the use of the King and Queen at the Delhi Durbar.

From Amsterdam to Almshouse

An Amsterdam woman, aged over sixty, Judith Ricardo, was admitted to this country by the Alien Immigration Board, on her guarantee that she would become a permanent inmate of the Jewish and Spanish almshouses.

Farmers' Fear of Anthrax

An outbreak of anthrax has occurred in a large dairy district near Knutsford, and a number of carcases were cremated. There is much alarm among farmers who keep large stocks and send large quantities of milk away.

Pope Reproves Cardinal

The Pope, in reproof of Cardinal Prisco, of Naples, has authorised priests to denounce what he characterises as the immorality of certain recent fashions in feminine attire. The Archbishop has placed a ban of silence on his flock in regard to this matter.

Scrapping Two More Battleships

The battleships Ramillies and Resolution, which were launched in 1892, but were already obsolete, were paid off from the Fourth Division of the Home Fleet at Devonport, and towed away to the Motherbank, to be put up for sale in due course.

Venerable Prize Essayist

Mrs. Elizabeth Barton, Upper Norwood, who is eighty-four, has been adjudged the winner of a guinea prize for the best essay upon the All-Red Route, the Festival of Empire's mile and a half of electric railway in the Crystal Palace grounds.

New Honor for Lord Roberts

As a sequel to the announcement that the name of the Veteran Reserve had been altered to the National Reserve, the London Gazette intimates that Field-Marshal Earl Roberts has been appointed by the King to be colonel of the National Reserve.

Gold in Malayan Straits

According to the statement of a Chinaman who owns land at Bukit Mas,, Perak, in the Malayan Peninsula, when grass is pulled up particles of gold are found adherring to the roots. The American Consul at Singapore announces that this has been proved to be a rich gold-bearing estate.

Another of the Six Hundred was taken to his last rest, John Ford, late of the 4th Hussars, a Mutiny and Crimean veteran, being buried at Paddington Cemetery. A detachment from his old regiment attended the funeral. The coffin was covered with the Union Jack, upon which rested Ford's sword and cap. He was in his eightieth year.

OBJECTED TO THE GAZERS

The Platform Had to be Cleared Before the Begum of Bhopal Came Out

The Begum of Bhopal, who arrived at Geneva from Paris, accompanied by a suite of twenty-six persons, caused an anxious time at the station by refusing to leave the coach until the platforms had been cleared of the curious crowd. She also refused to see the local authorities. In the meantime other trains were due, and had to be stopped by signals. Finally the platforms were cleared, and the Begum, with her party, started for their hotel in motor cars.

Burglaries in England

From 11,173 in 1897, the number of burglaries and cases of housebreaking in the United Kingdom has increased to 19,888 in 1909.

A Huge Halibut

Weighing 700 pounds, or nearly a third of a ton, the largest halibut on record was recently landed by a Hull trawler at Billingsgate Market.

MASCULINE ATTIRE

Berlin is Endeavoring to Bring About a Reform

A "Men's Dress Reform Society" has been founded in Berlin, with the object of bringing masculine attire to a higher hygienic standard. The society protests against the "air-tight armor plating" of the starched shirt-front, the cast-iron rule of black frock coats for weddings and funerals alike, and the general system of dress which involves the wearing of many tight-fitting garments, each overlapping the other.

The society is greatly in favor of knee-breeches for every-day wear, in place of conventional trousers, which, its members declare, require great skill in cutting and are a source of considerable trouble to the wearer. Stiff collars and cuffs are also tabooed.

The society recognises, however, that the fight is going to be a hard one, particularly as the leaders of fashion—high officials, society men, and others—are creatures of convention, and will not of their own accord go outside the beaten track. The first propaganda will, therefore, be made among men of independent standing—for instance, writers, artists, physicians and sportsmen. These circles will be carried along by force of development, and will thus make the reform style of dress sociably possible.

JAMES HAZEN HYDE

The murmur of disapproval that emanated from the refusal of the arrangement committee of the American Chamber of Commerce to permit the presence of ladies at their Fourth of July banquet, has grown to such proportions that it is occupying the attention of the Parisian press. It is claimed that James Hazen Hyde, the chairman of the committee, is directly to blame for the exclusion order.

TUNNEL UNDER CHANNEL

Would Facilitate the Exchange of Goods Between Britain and the Continent

Nothing more epoch-making could happen to Great Britain than the construction of a tunnel under the English Channel. It would play a vast role in the development of Africa, and people would be week-ending in Algeria, if not at the Cape. But its principal and immediate advantage would be the arrival in bulk of the goods from the Continent and vice-versa. Flowers and fruits from the South of France could arrive in Covent Garden from their refrigerating vans as fresh as when they were gathered, whilst pottery and cottons from England's manufacturing centres could be distributed with rapidity, without breakages and intermediate handlings, to the various continental markets.

Sudden Death in Skipping Rope

It was announced the other day to the troops at Aldershot that a skipping-rope had been found hanging on one of the high-tension power lines and a piece of wire over a telephone line. Attention was directed to the danger of instant death if contact had been established between the power line and a person's body.

BOY MUSICIANS BEFORE KINGS

Children Who Earn More Than Cabinet Ministers—A Genius of Five Years

This can certainly be termed the age of baby prodigies, for the number of boys and girls of tender years who perform on the stage at the present time runs well over a score. A few Saraqates and Paderewski's in sashes and pinafores gain Royal recognition almost before the public has heard of them, and during the last week or two the inhabitants of a street in Maida Vale have been surprised, if not exactly pleased, by brilliant five-o'clock-in-the-morning performances on a grand piano of rhapsodies by Liszt and Chopin waltzes.

At first it was imagined that an old professor had taken up his abode in the neighborhood, but it has just come to light that the pianist is Master Erwin Nyiregyhazi, of Budapest, who is only five years of age. Erwin has apparently been practising for a Royal performance, for soon he will play before King George and Queen Mary.

Although the boy will not become a public artiste before he reaches the age of fifteen, it is understood that he will give a series of drawing-room concerts. He appeared at the Duchess of Rutland's house in Arlington Street, Piccadilly, and gave a wonderful exhibition of technique and memory. He played with perfect fluency works by Bach, Handel, Chopin, Rachmaninoff, Mozart, Greig, and Liszt.

After the unveiling of Queen Victoria's Memorial the German Emperor and Empress drove to St. Dunstan's, Regent Park, where they were present at a garden-party given by Lord and Lady Londesborough. The Kaiser took a great deal of interest in David Paget, the "boy fiddler," who played a couple of selections, appearing before the Royal party in the clothes which he were during the latter days of his street peregrinations, for some time ago he was found playing to a theatre queue in a London thoroughfare. Paget, who is ten years old, was awarded first prize in a recent competition held for street-players. He performed the Intermezzo from "Cavalleria Rusticana" before the German monarch with remarkable skill.

His Majesty of Potsdam quite recently instructed Hans von Garnier, a boy musician, to write him an opera. It was six years ago when the Kaiser first became interested in the boy, who is now sixteen years of age. Garnier had composed a Grenadier March, which his Majesty thought so well of that he ordered its inclusion in the list of the so-called German Army marches for infantry and cavalry. A little while ago Garnier composed a Review March, to be played during the "Present," when the Emperor passes down the front of his troops, and this was played, by Royal orders, at a banquet of the Territorial battalions.

Moritz Lutzen, who commenced to play the piano when three years of age, has acquired considerable distinction as a composer of music. He has conducted an orchestra of 180 players in some of his own compositions before the German Emperor, and conducted the Garde Républicaine, the famous Parisian band, in a concert consisting exclusively of his own pieces. He also won prominence in this country by giving a concert of his compositions to his own conducting with Mr. Dan Godfrey's band at Bournemouth, on the outskirts of which city, by the way, he was born.

Mischa Elman, is another wonderful boy musician. He was thought good enough to play a concerto at the Birmingham Triennial Festival in 1906. Young Mischa was a pupil of Professor Auer, of St. Petersburg, who described him as the future Joseph Joachim.—Tit-Bits.

A PROFESSIONAL CROOK

Joseph Duffield Assumed Many Roles To Obtain Money

After adopting more roles than many a professional actor has done, including that of a public-house keeper, an American champion boxer and a ship's steward, in all of which he obtained money fraudulently, Joseph Duffield, a seaman, has been sentenced at the London sessions to fifteen months' hard labor. Detective-Sergeant George Weston, who arrested him, stated that he had been again and again sentenced to terms of hard labor, and once to penal servitude for fraud at Hull, Grimsby and York. Since he was last released from prison he had been daily living by fraud in various parts of London. He had visiting-cards printed, on which he set forth that he was the proprietor of a large public-house in the East End, and, calling on tradesmen and others, he gave various orders and commissions, and on some pretext obtained money.

A BOGUS PEER

He Wormed His Way Into the Good Graces of Lord Dunsany

All Dublin is laughing at the exploits of a clever Dublin swindler, a well-dressed young man, who arrived in the village of Dunslaughlin, County Meath, on an old bicycle, explaining his rusty mount by saying that his motor-car had broken down, and represented himself to be a well-known doctor. An attempt to borrow a local doctor's motor-car failed, but he secured, without paying, food at a hotel, and victimised several of the villagers. Then he made his way to the residence of Lord Dunsany, the well-known literary peer, and announcing himself as "Lord Clifford," won the confidence of the servants—a gamekeeper obligingly advanced the guest £10 to see him through the evening. Finally, after an enjoyable stay, "Lord Clifford" asked that Lord Dunsany's motor-car should be brought round to take him into Dublin. The car came round, and the guest was driven to the

He Wormed His Way Into the Good Graces of Lord Dunsany

All Dublin is laughing at the exploits of a clever Dublin swindler, a well-dressed young man, who arrived in the village of Dunsiaughlin, County Meath, on an old bicycle, explaining his rusty mount by saying that his motor-car had broken down, and represented himself to be a well-known doctor. An attempt to borrow a local doctor's motor-car failed, but he secured, without paying, food at a hotel, and victimised several of the villagers. Then he made his way to the residence of Lord Dunsany, the well-known literary peer, and announcing himself as "Lord Clifford," won the confidence of the servants—a gamekeeper obligingly advanced the guest $10 to see him through the evening. Finally, after an enjoyable stay, "Lord Clifford" asked that Lord Dunsany's motor-car should be brought round to take him into Dublin. The car came round, and the guest was driven to the [illegible]

THE MARTYRDOM OF THE LOST PATROL

A TRAGEDY of the Wilderness of the Great Northwest, Where Four Members of the Canadian Mounted Police Grimly Did Their Duty as the Unwritten Law of the Force Commanded, Until Famine and Cold Claimed Their Lives

From all the matchless narratives of heroism, suffering and gaunt privation undergone by man at the call of duty, none could be found to shadow the deeds of these great, stout hearted men, the Canadian Mounted Police, about whom this tale is told—who consecrated their lives to their true law. Never an open door while hope of success remained! What a grimmer code made by the sons of men! It sent these with the mail through the wilderness of the great Northwest, it stood the barriers of return and brought about tragedy, grim as imaginative genius has ever imagined. It set them singly at grips with hunger, cold, disease, madness, death, and found them invulnerable and invincible in one thing—determination to succeed or perish. A correspondent in the Northwest has carefully verified the route of death followed by these martyrs to duty and obtained the photographic illustrations accompanying the story.

FIGHTING for seven days against an alliance of three invincible enemies—cold, hunger and exhaustion—four men perished last February in the dreary wilderness of scrub and snow that stretches across Albert Province between Fort Macpherson and Dawson City. The world read about the lost patrol of the Canadian mounted police—read and forgot, as is its way—but the idea for which four stanch, iron nerved men gave their lives will be perpetuated. It is the idea of duty and honor, the idea which permeates the very life of the police of the great Northwest and makes one of their number walk singly and empty handed straight to the muzzles of a hundred leveled rifles.

Since the inauguration, in 1873, of the little band of seven hundred men who hold in leash the wildness and savagery of the whole Dominion, that same idea has ruled them. It is a matter of tradition that they never quail, that they never turn back, and so it was that the lost patrol, in easy reach of safety, refused to return to the little post whence they started and groped about for days, consuming precious provisions and more precious energy until their last resource was spent and they were left without the means of subsistence for the return grind.

It was on December 21, 1910, that Inspector Fitzgerald, with three constables—Carter, Kinney and Taylor—plunged into the wilderness on the way to Dawson City, whence they were to go to Herschel Island, on the Arctic coast, to take command there. Carter, who had formerly resigned from the force, had been sworn in as a guide, stating that he was familiar with the trails.

To the man of civilization the task at first flush would seem Herculean. One hundred and fifty-six miles as the bird would fly, but interminable leagues for the dogs with their dog sledges, who must circle and detour through oceans of snow and unchanging, stunted vegetation. Mile after mile of trail, where had stretched the bones of many a high hoped prospector whose hunt for the gold fields of the Klondike had resulted in tragedy.

It is not in the nature of the big men of the big Northwest to hesitate, and although Fitzgerald had not been over the trail since the winter of 1906 and Carter, the guide, had last travelled it in 1907, the little band packed their "duff" and, taking charge of the dog-sledges, set off up the Peel River.

South they travelled for days, past the flat country, through the awesome, high towering cañons, where the river rushes between dizzying walls of rock, and only a ribbon of blue canopies the rugged slit in the earth. So bravely does the river rush through these great earth wounds that even in coldest winter it seldom freezes, and the formation of treacherous, sodden ice sledges makes it dangerous to cross.

Indians travelling by canoe often leave the river at Trail Creek to avoid a part of the rapids, but never in this hazardous venture made unless the party is well supplied with food. For ninety miles a narrow, crooked trail skirts the west bank of the river through country barren of game, uninhabited even by the hardiest, most tenacious animals of the Arctic.

Into this trail, the long portage, the detachment of police certainly plunged. Bacon and flour were abundant and no doubt, they had no expectation of difficulty on the way. So far as can be learned from Fitzgerald's diary, which was accurately kept until probably the day before his death, the long portage was successfully negotiated. A few miles south of the portage a large tributary joins the Peel River, and up this lies the road to Dawson City. Countless little creeks, veins and arteries of the forest form a tangled network to confuse the traveller, and even if the proper trail is located at the mouth of the Wind River the country traversed is sterile, cruel, shunned even by nature. The Indians, deeming it abounding in evil spirits, avoid it as they would a plague. Such are the conditions which would have been faced by the patrol in the most favorable of circumstances.

Until they reached the Wind River, on January 10, the men endured only the ordinary hardships of forest life. Then began the search for the Heart Wind Divide, the short trail into Dawson City. There Carter seemingly became bewildered. Search as they would, they could not strike the trail.

Men less stanch would have turned back immediately. Men of courage would have deemed it folly to attempt a blind search in a mystic maze of snow decked hills. But Fitzgerald and his three companions were carrying the mail, the British mail. It was a matter of honor—not alone the honor of the men themselves but that of the great Dominion.

The law of the Mounted Police is tradition, but it is ingrained, stronger than any tersely worded regulations. Behind lay safety, but ahead lay duty, mercilessly inexorable. So for seven days the men wandered about through the hills looking for the lost trail. Each day the little store of food dwindled and the cold bit deeper as there was less of proper nourishment for tired bodies.

True to Fatal Precedents.

There must have been a struggle in the minds of the men, but the diaries do not show it. It seemed not to have entered the head of Inspector Fitzgerald that he could return to Fort Macpherson and find safety. Yet, as he saw his men grow weaker and weaker, saw the dogs which drew the provision sledges waste, and knew that Carter was becoming more and more confused, he must have longed to double on his tracks and pound down into Macpherson, where there were life and friends and food. But there were always the mail and the tradition of the force. There was the precedent of "Big Jack" Collins, who had faced three-score of Indian rifles alone and unarmed, and of Sergeant Colbrook, who had looked into the muzzle of "Red Jack's" revolver and died sooner than withhold the words:—

"In the name of the law I arrest you."

It was not in Fitzgerald's make-up to retreat, nor does his diary, even at the last, hold a word of condemnation or reproach for Carter.

The men had evidently determined to persist in their efforts to find the Heart Wind Divide until almost the last scrap of food was consumed. Not until then could they with honor and decency turn back to the way they had come. On January 17, with ten pounds of bacon and eight pounds of flour to carry four men through a three weeks' battle against death, the patrol turned back. To quote from Fitzgerald's diary:—

"Carter seems utterly bewildered; he does not seem to be able to recognize one river from another. Must reluctantly return to Peel River."

(Peel River is a common name for Fort Macpherson, the only post on that river.)

The detachment was in desperate straits and it was imperative to make the small quantity of nourishing food extend over as long a time as possible. On the first day of the return journey the first of the dogs was killed and the men made their dinner of the carcass. The dogs refused to eat the flesh of their kind, and Fitzgerald thought it justifiable to feed them from the scant larder rather than have them weaken from starvation until they could not drag the sledges. Unwisely the men devoured the livers, and that night all were frightfully ill. To multiply their discomfiture the dogs were so emaciated that it became a necessity to utilize the livers in order to make them last until they should reach Fort Macpherson.

The trackless snow made going heavy.

With the temperature from 35 to 55 below zero the cold bit cruelly into the poorly nourished bodies, and the men dragged painfully on their way. Illness weakened them and dragged at their heels like a nightmare. A growing horror of the foodless, merciless forest must have goaded them to superhuman efforts, but bone and muscle and sheer nerve cannot do beyond their limit.

Three long days, that seemed but a single horrid dream, the patrol fought their way through never ending stretches of scrub oak and scraggy, monotonous, stunted timber, and they knew day and night that death hovered over them, wings spread, ready to swoop upon them.

The mail was carefully packed on one of the sledges. It was being taken back, but not until every resource had been tried and failed, and there was not the vestige of a possibility that the men could beat through to Dawson City. Until almost their last pound of food was gone they had striven and sought for the lost trail.

Judging from the diaries, Carter wandered here and there, completely lost in the tangle of streams and the monotony of woods. Hour by hour he became more worried, hopeless, confused, until, as Fitzgerald put it, he seemed dazed, only partly conscious. Taylor suffered most, at least he showed it most. The diet of dog flesh sickened him and caused physical pain.

On January 20, the third day of the return tramp, the last of the bacon and flour was eaten, and the men, with dog flesh alone to depend upon for subsistence, realized, with awful fulness, the terrible circumstances they were facing. The race against death had begun in earnest. Almost three weeks to go under the most adverse physical conditions and not a scrap of proper food.

And still Fitzgerald, in command of the patrol, kept his diary, neatly, fully, concisely. Scarcely a word of the terrible conditions under which they were struggling appears. The fact that men were ill from eating dog liver was stated simply, coldly, with not a word of complaint.

Slowly, relentlessly, the diet of dog meat sapped the health and power of the men. Their faces swelled, the skin broke into irritating rashes, dried and peeled. Taylor seemed to be affected the worst. He could scarcely trudge through the snow. He shivered continually and none of the men seemed able to resist the awful cold. Just when they succumbed is not known.

Fitzgerald's diary was kept until February 5, the last camp before the one where the bodies of Taylor and Kinney were found. How the death of these two comrades affected the survivors is a matter of conjecture, but it must have been a sad blow to them. Taylor, it is presumed, took his own life, goaded to the action by his untold sufferings. It must have cast a spirit of gloom over Fitzgerald and Carter that did much to take the heart and hope out of their plucky fight.

On January 27, with the thermometer registering 18 degrees below zero, the men left camp at half-past seven in the morning. Until noon they dragged through endless wastes of snow. It must have seemed as though they had travelled miles upon miles. The going was heavy, and the effort to put one foot before the other required every effort of the men. At noon, utterly worn out, they rested in the snow for an hour.

A little camp known as Waugh's tent was but a few miles away, and in hope of finding food there the men did not kill one of the remaining ten dogs.

Coveted Cache Empty.

All morning long, through the heavy, almost obliterated trail, they dreamed of Waugh's tent and of food that would in all probability have been hidden by the last party stopping there. The idea of a good meal, food that would to them be luxurious, cheered the men and helped them in their weary battle. Refreshed in a manner after the rest at noon, they took the trail and pushed on for Waugh's tent. They travelled faster now, yearning and groaning inwardly for the anticipated refreshment. At two o'clock the yellowed canvas of the tent showed between the warped branches of the scrub trees, and with a last despairing effort the men goaded themselves into haste. At the tent they searched furiously for food, but none was found. The cache likewise was empty, and the little band mentally staggered under this fresh blow.

The hope which had buoyed them over eleven miles of forest waste was suddenly shattered. The stomach revolted at the very thought of another meal such as they had been forcing themselves to endure. There was nothing left for the dogs to eat. One of them was taken a distance from the camp and killed. A portion of the meat was frozen and buried where the other dogs would find it, and under these conditions they seemed not to recognize the flesh. It was the only way they could be induced to eat the meat. The men ate sparingly, the illness which followed in part neutralizing the benefit of the nourishment.

The night was spent at Waugh's tent and an early start made next day. The men suffered terribly from the cold in their emaciated condition and the temperature had sunk to 34 degrees below zero. Until three o'clock in the afternoon they battled their way, then camped for the night, having negotiated twelve miles. Fitzgerald mentioned in his diary that Taylor was extremely ill. The old trail was hardly distinguishable and hope grew fainter and fainter.

Next day a cabin was found and the men had a chance to enjoy a little warmth. One of the sleds and seven single dog harnesses were cached, but the precious mail was not left. Everything the men could dispense with was cast aside, but the mail meant more to them than life. It meant honor, its loss meant failure.

So these strong, undaunted men trudged on, wallowing in snow, sometimes blinded by driving flakes, always hungry, weary and suffering with the bitter cold. On February 5 Fitzgerald made the last entry in his diary. The next day Taylor and Kinney died. Probably the inspector had not the heart to further chronicle the sufferings of the little band. To one knowing the circumstances and the outcome of it all the simple diary tells a tragic story. Between the lines are written sufferings indescribable, hopes blasted fears that the men could not, dare not, express. Only eight terrible miles were covered on Saturday, and on Sunday Fitzgerald wrote in his notebook:—

"Forty-eight below, Sunday, February 5; fine strong south wind. Left camp at quarter-past seven. Neoned one hour and camped about eight miles down. Just before noon I broke through ice and found one foot frozen and had to make fire. Killed another dog tonight. Can only go few miles a day. Everybody breaking out on the body and skin peeling off. Eight miles."

In the next camp Corporal Dempster, who left Dawson City late in December with a party of men, found the bodies of Kinney and Taylor. A diary kept by Taylor bore entries dated February 6 and February 9, four days later than Fitzgerald's last entry. What the men did in the interim is a mystery. They must have wandered bewildered possibly day and night, not knowing where they were or which way to turn.

The last pages of Taylor's diary, written on scraps of paper in which salt had been kept, tell of the awful sufferings he endured and how it was that he was driven and hounded into taking his own life. He wrote:—

"February 8. Forgive me, little Queen. • • • said I wouldn't live long. It hardly seems • • • I, good God, what have I done that I should be snuffed out like that? It's • • • joke. Fifty more miles on cursed dog meat? Like hell. • • • Pink."

"February 9. • • • your knowledge, take it, keep it. Christ help me for • • • why suffer when I have the means? • • • Bye."

It will never be known with certainty whether Fitzgerald and Carter bunked with their friends on that last night or not. Kinney and Taylor, who were found dead in the same place, were stretched out with two sleeping bags under them and above them. Kinney is supposed to have died first, killed by starvation, suffering and poisoning from the dog liver. His feet had been terribly frozen, and the skin, livid and diseased, was peeling from his body.

Taylor could stand it no longer. Agonies he must have suffered that last terrible night. Men like him do not snuff out their own lives impulsively. It must have been a matter of pride with him, as it was with the others, to exhaust every ounce of energy before turning back. But the suffering and the illness proved too strong for him. Frenzied, he placed the muzzle of his rifle between his eyes as he lay on the ground. How long he struggled against himself can only be guessed, but some time in the darkness, after, perhaps, he had tossed awake for endless, nightmare hours, he pulled the trigger and blew off the top of his head.

If Fitzgerald and Carter were there they could not stop to attempt to bury their comrades in the frozen snow. It was purely a matter of life and death to them, and they knew that every rod travelled meant that safety was nearer and that every ounce of strength expended lessened their chances in the race.

Toward the last they were obliged to chew the tough leather sledge wrappers for food. The greatest wonder is that they persisted in their awful fight as long as they did.

Taylor and Kinney were found thirty-five miles from Fort Macpherson, where they would have found help.

Their Dying Effort.

Ten miles further on the trail Fitzgerald and Carter bunked together for the last time. Their feet were frozen, their bodies were almost to skeletons, and they showed signs of having suffered terribly from illness. They must have floundered through the snow all day in the hope of finding help at night, for Fitzgerald had calculated that they had only a few miles to go and they had averaged almost ten miles a day.

The wide detours they had been forced to make had confused him or he may have become so bewildered toward the last that he was not capable of reckoning where he was. Often the trail had been completely lost, and in their searching for it the men must have been bereft of all sense of distance and direction. It cannot be told exactly when the last two of the party died, but it is certain that even when hope had been crushed out of them at the end of that last awful day, when the goal of all their efforts seemed so near at hand, and when thoughts of warmth and comfort and plenty must have tantalized them, they fought on and on with their last breath of strength.

Not even a dog was left for food. They had chewed the nauseating wrappers of the sleds and sapped from these what little nourishment had sustained them. They had fought their bitter fight right through to the cruel finish, as is the custom of the Mounted Police, and they had not won, but they had done their duty as they saw it. They were courageous men and true to their ideals to the very last, and they helped to grip the power of the Canadian police on the great Dominion.

Side by side they lay down to sleep that last cold, relentless night, and neither went a step further. Twenty-five short miles were between them and Fort Macpherson when Corporal Dempster's party found their frozen bodies.

Carter had evidently died first. Fitzgerald knew it, for he had done what was in his power to bury the body, but the task was too much. It must have been a gruesome and weird sight—the lank, starved men of iron working there in the tree filtered moonlight, the desolation of scrub wood and pallid snow stretching endlessly in all directions. Not even the dismal howl of a wolf or the cheerless hoot of an owl to break the stillness or to remind the suffering laborer that there was life, other than his own feeble spark, anywhere in that vast wilderness.

The inspector may have staggered from his work to die, or, perhaps, utterly exhausted from his efforts, he lay down to rest and never stood upon his feet again. A little way from his last stanch comrade he was found, the mail for which he had fought so persistently rolled in a little packet by his side.

And so the lost patrol perished, and the four men who had died for an idea were buried in a little churchyard in the midst of the barren waste of fur which had made them hard and big and brave.

Other men have done it and other men of the Mounted Police will do it that the great Empire may be perpetuated, but the lost patrol aroused the sympathy and the feeling of Canada, and in vivid contrast to the plain little graves at Fort Macpherson a monument will be erected, probably at Regina, Saskatchewan, the headquarters of the western division of the force, by the combined action of the leading clubs of Canada.

Montreal Grain and Produce.

MONTREAL, Aug. 28.—Business in grain for export account continues quiet, but there is a good local demand, and this, coupled with the strength displayed in Winnipeg, gave a strong feeling here, and prices have an advancing tendency. The demand for spring wheat flour is good, and the market is fairly active, with a firm undertone.

The butter market is strong, and higher prices are anticipated in the near future on account of the good demand and the strength in the country. The exports last week were 11,541 packages. Cheese is fairly active and firm. The shipments last week were 74,835 boxes. Provisions are active and firm. Demand for eggs is good.

Oats—Canadian western, No. 2, 43¾c to 44c, car lots, ex-store; extra No. 1 feed, 43¾c to 43¾c; No. 3 C.W., 43¾c to 43c.

Flour—Manitoba spring wheat patents, firsts, $5.40; seconds, $4.90; winter wheat patents, $4.50 to $4.75; strong bakers', $4.75; straight rollers, $4 to $4.10; in bags, $1.85 to $2.

CATTLE MARKETS.

Union Stock Yards.

TORONTO, Aug. 28.—Receipts of live stock at the Union Stock Yards were 92 carloads, consisting of 1894 cattle, 179 hogs, 563 sheep and 31 calves.

Exporters.

Export steers sold at $5.80 to $6.45, one load selling at the latter figure, and another at $6.35; bulls, for export, sold at $5 to $5.25.

Butchers.

Prime picked loads and lots sold at $5.90 to $6.15; loads of good, $5.65 to $5.85; medium, $5.35 to $5.60; common, $5 to $5.30; cows, $3 to $5.25; bulls, $4 to $5.

Milkers and Springers.

A moderate number of milkers and springers sold at $40 to $80 each, but only one at the latter price.

Veal Calves.

The market for veal calves was firm at $5 to $6 per cwt., or an average of $7.25 per cwt.

Sheep and Lambs.

Sheep, light ewes, sold at $3.75 per cwt. average; culls and heavy ewes, $2.50 to $3.25; lambs, $6.35 to $6.50, or an average of $6.45 to $6.50.

Hogs.

E. L. Woodward, buyer for Swift Canadian Co., quoted $8.10 for hogs, fed and watered.

Montreal Live Stock.

MONTREAL, Aug. 28.—At the Montreal Stock Yards west end market, the receipts of live stock for the week ending Aug. 26 were 3350 cattle, 2127 sheep and lambs, 2525 hogs and 350 calves. The supply on the market for sale this morning consisted of 950 cattle, 1675 sheep and lambs, 950 hogs and 175 calves.

There was no important change in the condition of the market for cattle, prices being firm owing to the small run of really good stock, which tended to increase the demand for the lower grades, as butchers and packers generally were short of supplies, consequently a fairly active trade was done. There was also some demand from Quebec buyers and a couple of carloads were bought for shipment to that market.

On the whole the trade was satisfactory to both buyers and sellers. At the close everything was cleaned up. Choice steers sold at $6.5 to $6.25; good at $5.75 to $6; fairly good, $5.25 to $5.50; common, $4.50 to $4.75 per cwt. Cows were in demand at $4.25 to $4.50 for choice, and $3.75 to $4 for fair to good. Bulls were purchased in moderate numbers at $4.25 to $4.50 for choice, on account of the short offerings, and the demand for packers' selected stock. Prices for selected lots ranged at from $7 to $7.25; mixed lots, at $6.60 to $7.00, and heavy, $6.25 to $6.75 per 100 pounds, weighed off cars.

The trade in lambs was very active, there being a good demand from local and outside buyers for supplies.

Receipts of lambs were fairly large, but prices ruled steady at the decline noted last Wednesday, sales being made freely at 6c to 6¼c per pound. Sheep unchanged owing to the fact that the offerings do not increase to any extent, and sales were made at 4c to 4½c per pound. Good calves were scarce and in demand at prices ranging at from $12 to $15 each, and the lower grades brought from $6 to $10.

East Buffalo Cattle Market.

EAST BUFFALO, Aug. 28.—Cattle—Receipts, 4125; market shade lower; prime steers, $6.75 to $7.25; butcher grades, $6.10 to $7; cows, $3.50 to $5.25.

Calves—Receipts, 1200 head; market active and firm; cull to choice, $3 to $9.25.

Sheep and Lambs—Receipts, 3000 head; market active and steady, choice lambs, $6 to $7; cull to fair, $4.75 to $5.75; yearlings, $4.50 to $5; sheep, $1.50 to $3.75.

Hogs—Receipts, 12,700; market weak; yorkers, $8 to $8.05, stags, $5 to $6; pigs, $5.25; mixed, $8 to $8.05; heavy, $8; roughs, $6.75 to $6.85.

Chicago Live Stock.

CHICAGO, Aug. 28.—Hogs—Receipts, 24,000; market steady to lower; mixed and butchers, $7.45 to $7.75; good, heavy, $7.10 to $7.65; rough, heavy, $6.90 to $7.10; light, $7.25 to $7.60; pigs, $6.85 to $7.60.

Calves—Receipts, 3000; market weak to lower; native, $6.15 to $8.70; western, $3.50 to $5.65; lambs, $4 to $6.60; western, $4.70 to $6.75.

Work of Train Wreckers.

Middletown, Ohio, Aug. 29.—Train wreckers who had removed spikes from a rail were responsible for the derailment of an express train over the Valley Line of the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad Sunday night, resulting in one death and injury to about sixty others.

Burglars Make Haul.

Berlin, Aug. 29.—Burglars operated successfully at Bridgeport, getting gold watches and $40 in bills and coins. The police thus far have been unable to apprehend them.

Sunday Cars Popular.

Kingston, Aug. 29.—Kingston's Sunday car service will be discontinued after next Sunday. The company agreed to run July and August, but decided to give another day's service. The cars have been well patronized, the receipts being larger per hour than any other day. Sunday night's cars were tied up for over an hour for an unusual cause. The fireman at the power-house was taken suddenly ill, and before a man could be secured to take his place the steam gave out and the power fell off.

Motorists' Close Call.

St. Catharines, Aug. 29.—Mrs. F. N. Hara, Robert Fuller, of the Imperial Bank, Miss Bailey of this city, and Mrs. Hara's son, nearly met death in an automobile accident Sunday night.

They were returning home by the Lake Shore road, Mrs. Hara driving, when she lost her head and the car slid back over a ten-foot embankment. Fortunately the car was caught by a tree and though all the occupants were thrown out, none were hurt.

Sarah Was Captured.

Ottawa, Aug. 29.—The gasoline schooner Sarah, of Seattle, was taken into New Westminster, B.C., harbor yesterday morning, in charge of a Canadian fishery protective cruiser.

The Sarah was taken by the Government cruiser while, it is alleged, she was fishing within the three-mile limit. The capture was reported by wire to the Department of Marine and Fisheries.

Petulant Tennyson.

Tennyson was one of the most fortunate of poets in that he was rarely criticised adversely, yet Mr. Bram Stoker, who saw him often while his plays were in course of production at the Lyceum, said that he used constantly to complain of "the attacks made on him." He actually wound up one day by declaring that he often wished he had never written a line.

Antimony.

Antimony was first extracted from the ore in 1490 by a monk.

A Wearisome Walk.

At Sheffield, England, in 1860, Richard Manks walked 1,000 miles in 1,000 hours, commencing each mile at the beginning of each hour. He was completely exhausted at the expiration of the task, and for a time it was thought that he would die, but he finally recovered his strength.

Illuminating a City.

Emperor Constantine early in the fourth century caused the whole city of Constantinople to be illuminated on Easter eve with lamps and wax candles.

Croup.

Croup, that severe and sometimes fatal infantile disease, although known from a remote period, was not scientifically described and treated until 1765.

An Irish Giant.

The Irish giant Patrick O'Brien, who lived from 1761 to 1806, was eight feet seven inches high and for many years exhibited himself in London and at fairs at Smithfield. His hand from the commencement of the palm to the extremity of the middle finger measured twelve inches, and his shoe was seventeen inches long.

The Appian Way.

Most celebrated of all the Roman roads, the Appian way, was originally constructed 312 B. C. It extended a distance of 125 miles.

Bamboo in China and Japan.

For centuries the Japanese and Chinese have raised the bamboo as a practical crop. The natives of tropical India and the Malay archipelago would be at a loss without it, as they depend upon it not only for their chief building material, but for ropes, mats, kitchen utensils, etc.

BOTHA A GOLFER.

Premier of South African Union Plays a Very Fair Game.

General Louis Botha, one of the colonial Premiers now in England, was one of the most skilful and aggressive of the Boer commanders in the South African War. He it was who planned the defences of the Tugela, and foiled for so long the late Sir Redvers Buller's efforts to effect the relief of Ladysmith. On the death of General Joubert he became commander-in-chief of the Boer forces, and in the long struggle his military exploits were brilliant and skilful. General Botha's genial humor, his tranquil, well-balanced mind, his sane outlook, and shrewd commonsense have served him and his country well in the past. It goes without saying that they will do so in the future.

There is no South African of either race whose name commands such wide respect. In all the whirlwinds of passion after the war, as well as in the tempestuous scenes that occurred at Pretoria before the final outbreak of hostilities, it at least was never breathed on. His sincerity as a Liberal opponent of President Kruger's fatal policy of exclusion was never in doubt. His chivalry, his humanity, his courage, and his skill were gladly recognised by all the British generals who faced him in the field.

His honor and his loyalty to his pledged word have always been equally above reproach. General Botha is not at all loquacious, and his voice was seldom heard in the old Volksraad. To crown his other perfections, he speaks English perfectly.

When he was in England in 1907, General Botha was initiated into the mysteries of golf and promised to lay out a course in South Africa. He did this, and now plays a respectable game. During the voyage to England this time, he set an example to the ship, retiring early and up early in the morning. He was out soon after six and walked briskly round the promenade deck for an hour and a half.

Occasionally he took part in the deck games, and the passengers elected him chairman of the Sports Committee. In this capacity he helped to arrange a two-days' program. The events included tugs-of-war, potato race, egg and spoon races, flat race, and chalking the pig's eye.

Premier's Ramble.

Immediately on arrival in England as one of the Dominion representatives at the coronation, the Hon. James S. McGowan, the Labor Premier of New South Wales, carried out a promise which he gave his aged mother (who emigrated from Lancashire fifty years ago) that he would spend his first day rambling among the green lanes of Old England, and he was charmed with all he saw.

Mr. McGowan was born at sea when his parents were about three weeks' sail from Melbourne, on August 16, 1856, but the career of the Sydney Premier has no sensational chapters. He had quietly pushed his way from the foundry to the Premiership by determined, useful work in the unions and in the ranks of the State Parliamentary Labor party. He graduated in Labor politics in 1891, when he became member for Redfern in the New South Wales House of Assembly. Redfern—the railway suburb of Sydney—has been loyal to him ever since. After three years in Parliament he was elected leader of the growing Labor party in 1894, and has been re-elected every three years since.

Like most of the best and ablest men in the Australian Parliament, James McGowan is an unaffectedly religious man. For twenty-four years he has been superintendent of an Anglican Sunday school in his own constituency.

A Natural Historian.

"How many animals of each kind did Noah have on the ark?" asks the Sunday school teacher.

"He started with two of each kind," answers Johnny, "but he must have landed with about sixty-five rabbits. I started with two of them a month ago myself."—Judge.

MR. STRATTON HOLDS BIG MEETING AT BRIDGENORTH MONDAY NIGHT

Candidate Deals Effectively With the Agreement—Mr. D. O'Connell Gives Conservative Candidate a Little Candid Consideration.

STORY OF HIS CAREER

Mr. John Telford, of Bridgenorth, presided over one of the best meetings ever held at Bridgenorth by either political party last (Monday) night. The hall was well filled with attentive listeners.

Hon. J. R. Stratton, Mr. R. R. Hall and Mr. D. O'Connel addressed the meeting and for two hours and one half the agreement, which is before the country at the present time, was fully considered, and all points thoroughly explained.

Mr. O'Connell, in the course of his address, dealt with the character and claims of the candidate of the Conservative party or a part of the Conservative party in West Peterborough. He showed that he was born with a silver spoon in his mouth and had never done very much to brighten it. He had been set up in life by his ancestors, and as far as adding to his wealth, or the wealth of the community, was just where he had started. He was blessed with a liberal education, as far as his receptive capacity made it available. He entered the law, and his success in that profession had been in line with his success in all departments of his activities as a citizen. The law proving to be rather bare picking, the newspaper business was tried, and the brilliancy of his failure in this was only equalled by the brilliancy of his failure in the law. He was then promoted with a walking stick and went to Toronto, where he entered upon law. Having again proven unsatisfactory, he returned to his birth-place where, after finding that the books he had written were not exactly a gold mine, he entered the ranks of the law profession again. The gentleman having shown his capacity for successful enterprise in such a remarkable manner, thought that a wider sphere of activity for his great ability would be found in politics; that his record of having never done anything in particular, would qualify him to serve as an acceptable representative to a live constituency like West Peterborough.

Not being able to make satisfactory progress with a policy that had to do with the Government of the country and the representation of the Riding, Mr. Burnham switched off into the thorny by-path of the race and creed cry, which he pushed to the front in his campaign of 1908, as he is doing in the campaign of 1911. This is the only department in Mr. Burnham's life activities in which he has been successful. He has been successful in setting the hand of neighbour against neighbour, in turning away the minds of the people from issues that legitimately engage their attention, in sowing the seed of strife, bitterness and all the evils that come from appeals to passion, bigotry and ignorance. This is the gentleman that was appealing to men of common sense in West Peterborough. This was, in effect, his whole platform, and while he was depending upon it as the chief plank in his platform, he has one redeeming feature. He has sense enough to have dread enough of the common sense of the public, to be ashamed of it and to want to make it a secret. He has made and printed over his own signature, and paid for the privilege of doing so, the declaration that "he had not intended to refer to the race and creed cry on the public platform," which meant that he intended to work it secretly and in the dark. This was the gentleman that had the assurance to ask the suffrages of sensible men.

Mr. O'Connell then went on to deal generally with the issue that was before the people in this campaign. The meeting closed with cheers for the King and Mr. Stratton.

PROSTITUTING THE CHURCH TO THE BASE PURPOSES OF BASE POLITICS

Mr. Burnham, the Conservative candidate is not content with assailing one Christian communion, in the interests of his grotesque candidature, but he must needs drag another through the slime of his sewer politics. His diabolically devious campaign methods pursued, the prostitution of religion to politics, are inconceivable to those who regard the Christian Church as something too sacred to be made a football of party politics, and a stalking horse for unworthy ambition.

For example. On Monday night the regular meeting of the Epworth League of the St. James' Methodist church, Aylmer street, south, was converted into a political ward meeting by a member of Mr. Burnham's South Ward committee, Mr. James Goodwin.

Mr. Goodwin is the unworthy (after last night) President of the St. James' Epworth League. On Sunday he made the visiting minister, who filled the pulpit in the absence of the pastor, an innocent party to a paltry political trick. He placed in his hand an announcement to the effect that his topic for the Epworth League on Monday (last) night would be "Citizenship," and those present would hear something that would guide them in the exercise of their franchise in the present election.

The meeting was held, with a large attendance, and the President, Mr. Goodwin, gave an address on "Patriotism," which was, in reality, a vicious, partizan stump speech, on the usual lines of the campaign literature used by "Tory" stumpers in the present election—in effect, a rabid appeal in the interests of Mr. Burnham.

Mr. Goodwin is welcome to "spout" all he likes for Mr. Burnham, but a protest must be entered against a ward politician making the society machinery of the Methodist Church, to subserve the ends of a politician to whom no means, however mischievous, are to be neglected, or unemployed—against converting it into a hog-wallow for ward politics.

This is done in the interests of Mr. Burnham, who is not a member of the Methodist church, nor much of a member, or attendant of any church, and against a man who is an attendant of the same church as Mr. Goodwin, a man who is a regular attendant and pew-holder in the Charlotte Street Methodist Church, and one of the most, if not most liberal contributors to the funds, not only of this church, but to the financial support of the interests of the churches of all denominations of Christianity.

The facts and the character of the offence against common, not to say Christian, decency, cannot be made any blacker by comment. They speak for themselves. Mr. Goodwin, if not at Mr. Burnham's suggestion, at any rate, in his interests, has degraded St. James' Church, has outraged a large part of its membership and disgusted the other part.

The nature of the cause and the desperate straits of the candidate are expressed more strongly in the very act referred to above, than they could be by any printable language that could be employed.

By their fruits ye shall know them.

GOOD POSITIONS

The Peterborough Business College is a worthy link in a chain of Seven Business Colleges, located in the cities of London, Peterborough, Welland, and the towns of Orangeville, Walkerton, Wingham, and Clinton. Owing to its high-grade work it is affiliated with the Commercial Educators' Association of Canada. It is freely admitted that owing to these connections, its students get the very best positions. Fall openings are on Aug. 28th, and Sept. 5th, but at this school each student is instructed privately at his or her own desk; students may enter any day. Many students study all at home, and others partly at home and finish at the College. As Spotton Colleges are the largest trainers in Canada, and have thirty years' experience, it would be well for young people to get their training there. Last year Mr. Spotton trained over 1,200 young people and placed them in good positions. What he has done for thousands of others he can do for you.

UNDER TWO FLAGS — AND TOO MUCH STEAM

"AGRICOLA" SHOWS UTTER FOOLISHNESS OF THE ANNEXATION VAPOURINGS

Claims of Conservative Leader a Reflection Upon the Loyalty of the Canadian People---A Calm, Serious Study of the Situation.

To the Editor of The Examiner.

Dear Sir,—At the present time men whose prominence should entitle them to a hearing are boldly declaring that increased trade with the United States will lead to annexation. This is a statement that cannot be treated lightly, the matter is serious and momentius and should be carefully considered. We are Britons, we love our country, our history and our ancestry, and we are content and happy in realising that we are working out a history of a part of the great Empire that will 'ere long bulk largely in the autonomy of the greater and more glorious Britain. Is there then any lurking danger that we wot not of, that will so influence our destiny that we shall suddenly find ourselves not Britons, but Americans? God forbid.

Yet, is it not the part of prudence to examine the forebodings of these prophets of evil?

What say they—that increased trade, increased commerce, increased mercantile communication with our neighbours will cause us, by reason of our increased prosperity to drop the old flag—the glorious old flag that for a thousand years braved the battle and the breeze—and sneak under the stars and stripes, a flag handsome, and honoured, but not the flag of our fathers, not the flag under which, for many generations, men of our blood stood, and cheered and sang God Save the King—God save the Queen; the flag that stands for freedom and justice and protection of British law and order? God forbid.

Or is it that this increased trade and commerce with our neighbours will so impoverish our great country that in our despair we will seek relief—anywhere, anywhere outside the Empire? God forbid; God forbid. We traded under the "pact of 1854-1866, and prospered. We traded with the United States more and more each succeeding year; they built barriers to keep us out, but the laws of commerce were too strong, as Mr. Borden says, "Nature and Geography" settled the matter—"that our trade should "go south and American trade should go North," on the line of least resistance, and so without compulsion, except that of Nature and Georgraphy, the two nations have forced the barriers and traded until last year's reciprocal trade amounted to $750,000,000, $404,-millions or more than with all the world besides, and these prophets of evil tell us that if the barriers were wholly removed and there was free untrammelled trade in raw productions Canada would be ruined, and in our ruin we would forget our old Mother, our own mam hood, and we would drop into the arms of Uncle Sam. God forbid!

We traded under the reciprocity treaty of '54-'66, and we traded under the laws of Nature and Georgraphy these sixty years without realising any annexation microbe in our system, or any impairment of our manhood, or our loyalty, and to-day we stand up in our strength and stretch ourselves in our vigour, suffering only from growing pains, and yet these prophets of evil, these birds of ill omen, are telling us that there is death in our members—Annexation microbes—of which we are unconscious, but which, with a little more trade along the line of Nature and Geography will overwhelm us in shame and ruin. God forbid.

Mr. Borden says the only remedy is for the men who till the soil and take our wealth out of the earth with the sweat of their brow, to consent that the productions of the soil shall abandon the route provided by Nature and Geography—the short haul and cheap route—and seek a market further away by 3,000 geographical miles, contrary to the law of Nature and Geography, and submit to have their produce loaded with the cost of extra haulage, extra middle men, extra time, all for the betterment of railways, ships, and far-away seaports!

The three great Canadian Transcontinental Railways all make for Port Arthur, abandon the rails and utilize the cheaper water route provided by Nature and Geography so far as it goes, and then take the rail again. Why is it a crime for the farmers of this great agricultural country to avail themselves of the nearer better marked provided by Nature and Geography. Is it not sound commercial economy to give the producer the value of his productions, lessened as little as possible by charges for freights, middlemen, etc., or will Mr. Borden say that the more you take from the producer for long freights, shipping charges, middle men, etc., the better for them; and that from Regina to Liverpool all men and all places shall fatten on the fruit of the toil of the farmer for the bettering of the country. That is what he publicly announces as his policy, and that it is the duty of a loyal farmer to submit with patriotic joy to this fleecing—God forbid; God forbid. Trading with the United States does not deprive us of other markets. We have had all markets; we will still have them all, and the judgement of the trader will still select the best market. To have choice more and greater markets is gain—to bar us against any of them is to deprive us of a natural right.

The 90 millions over the line offer a good market for some of our produce, the tariff is a barrier, knock it down and let the farmers have their natural rights, let us not listen to men who are trying to make us swallow the doctrine that the longest, slowest, dearest route to market is the best. Borden, for once, spoke the truth when he proclaimed that he was compelled to admit that Nature and Geography could not be ignored.

Yours faithfully,
Agricola.

Novel Window Attraction Featuring "Lion Brand" Collars

In one of the Cressman Co's show windows is a distinctly novel attraction that commands the attention of every passerby.

The display, which is cunningly contrived, features "Lion Brand" collars and has for its central attraction a large mechanical lion surrounded by ferns and shrubs. A show card bearing the inscription: "This is the Den For Lion Collars" enhances the novelty of the display.

The Cressman Co. are sole agents for this superior brand of collars; all are 4-ply linen, close fitting, look themselves; they are reversible, which makes them wear twice as long. The latest styles that have become most popular are the National and American. All sell at 20c. each or 3 for 50c.

This display is well worth seeing. Many conjectures have been put forth as to how the mechanism is controlled.

BELLEVILLE-PETERBOROUGH GAME ON LABOUR DAY

Will Peterborough be able to beat Belleville here on Monday next, Labour Day? The Grand Trunks and Petes have met twice before this season and on each occasion the Railway Men managed to carry off the big end of the score, winning by one run each time. The Quinlanites feel that their team is as fast, if not faster, than the Belleville nine and that with an even break in luck they can turn the tables on the visitors. Manager Quinlan will be back in time to perform on the rubber, while Ashton will work for the Grand Trunks. The game will be the feature of the Labour Day sports under the auspices of the Trades and Labour Council of Peterborough on Labour Day afternoon at Riverside Park.

Walter (Dutch) Gouter, catcher of the Peterborough Midland League team, left yesterday morning to spend a week's vacation at his home in Wellsville, N.Y. He will be back in Peterborough next week.

HAS A BAD RECORD

(Lindsay Post.)

In a telephone conversation with the Chief of Police of Peterborough, the local Chief was informed that Herbert Hughes is wanted in Hamilton on a charge of horse-stealing. There are ten convictions against him in Toronto. It will be remembered that Hughes is the man whom Chief of Police Chilton arrested at the G.T.R. station a couple of weeks ago on a charge of stealing some money and a watch &c from a man in Peterborough. The valise which was found in his possession by Chief Chilton is the property of Mr. C. B. McGowan, Toronto. Hughes is said to be the amateur boxing champion of Canada.

CONSERVATIVES AGAINST PREFERENCE.

The Conservative party was as strongly opposed to the British preference policy of the Liberal Government, as they are to reciprocity today. At the annual meeting of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association in 1897, President Kemp, now Conservative candidate in East Toronto, said:

There has been no discussion and no demand for this new move on the part of Canada. What are we to get in return for it?

The Mail and Empire said in May, 1897:

The scheme is termed British, but we fail to see that there is anything British in a measure which hampers the industry and retards the progress of the British inhabitants of this British land.

In 1900, after the policy had been in force three years and was thoroughly understood, Mr. Russell, a Liberal member, now a Nova Scotia Judge, moved:

That this House regards the principle of British preference in the Canadian customs tariff as one which in its application has already resulted, and will in an increasing measure continue to result, in national benefit to the Mother Country and to Canada, and which has already aided in welding, and must still more firmly weld together the ties which now bind them, and desires to express its emphatic approval of such British preference having been granted by the Parliament of Canada.

The entire Conservative party in the House of Commons voted with Mr. Bourassa against that resolution.

THE FARMERS FRIEND (?)

Mr. Sexsmith, the Conservative candidate in East Peterborough is a farmer, and poses as the farmer's friend, but he is a politician first, and a farmer's friend afterwards. We don't know what his field crops are like, but he has sown and reaped a big crop of inconsistency. He has the qualities of a stage wizard—he can blow hot and cold in the same breath—approve of reciprocity in the farmers interests, when he is speaking his own mind and denounce it when it is good party politics to do so.

Speaking in the House on Jan. 14, 1910, as reported in Hansard, Mr. Sexsmith said:

"It will be seen, therefore, that the Canadian farmers and market gardeners have been able to sell to the 80,000,000 population of the United States only $5,986,000 worth of these natural products, while the American farmers and market gardeners have been able to sell to 7,000,000 or 8,000,000 Canadians, $21,546,000 worth. Thus, the farmers of Canada are to this extent forced out of their own market and obliged to pay the freight for the transportation of their products to other markets of the world. This is the kind of treatment the farmers of Canada are receiving from this government all along the line. I remember from my boyhood days hearing the Liberals when in opposition, talking about capturing the markets of the United States for the Canadian farmers and having reciprocity. The Liberals are in power. Have we reciprocity to-day?"

Then, Mr. Sexsmith was the farmers' friend—when he was himself—when he spoke his right mind, or to do his party loyalty justice, when he thought he could say something damaging "again the government." Now, Mr. Sexsmith, when the reciprocity agreement—a purely business matter—has been made a party matter, opposes reciprocity because it has been provided by a Liberal government, which he denounced a year ago for not getting reciprocity. He is bound to be "again the government" even if in doing so he is compelled to oppose the interests of the farmer. He thinks more of the party than of the farmers interests.

In electing Mr. Sexsmith, the farmers of East Peterborough will be electing a man who, contrary to his own convictions, as expressed in Parliament, opposed a measure in the interests of his farmer constituents to attempt to gain a petty party advantage.

WILL HELP THE RAILWAYS.

The little Canadians, the pessimists, the narrow gauge opponents of reciprocity, are timid and of little faith. They regard Canada as a neglected child, needing a guardian, needing to be sheltered from every little breeze of competition that blows.

Reciprocity they say, will ruin our railways, divert traffic north and south. While this is an imaginary evil, if there is, or should be, any danger of injury, the damage has been done—north and south traffic has been in existence a long time. It is long since Canadian railways have been free from competition with United States railways. The day has long gone by, when Canadian railways were kept as far as possible from the United States boundary. The Canadian Pacific at first, when it was in the hands of Ottawa politicians, kept to that policy, but when it came under a live and energetic management, the invasion of the United States was the first move.

While the Grand Trunk was an "all Canadian" road, it had the worst possible record; it was only brought to life by invading United States territory at both ends. In the last few years it invaded the State of Maine and got an outlet at Portland. In the west it pushed its lines to Chicago and competed successfully with United States railways.

The Canadian Pacific, went in the same direction and on a much larger scale. Its long detour north of Lake Superior was soon found incapable of handling its winter traffic and a supplementary route was opened in United States territory. This was done by the purchase of two, practically dead United States railways, the Minneapolic ,St. Paul and Sault Ste Marie railway, and the Duluth and South Shore. A large proportion of C.P.R. winter traffic now comes over these lines, which have wide ramifications in the States. These are among the best investments the wide-awake railway has made.

The Canadian Northern, has taken similar action. Even before completing its line around the head of Lake Superior to Winnipeg, it sought a second string to its bow on United States soil. About half way between Winnipeg and Port Arthur, it is building a "short cut" across Minnesota to Duluth, a very strong geographical position for rail and water traffic,

The railway competition and invasion of the United States are not the only example of the irresistible outreach of railways for traffic. It is also a delusion to imagine, as some do, that the present currents of Canadian trade are all east and west. They may be mainly so, but independently of reciprocity they are becoming less exclusive. The Canadian railways do not now have Manitoba to themselves. At least two United States railways, the Great Northern, and the Northern Pacific, have independent entry into Manitoba at several points.

Railways, like all the interests of a nation, thrive by trade. They do not wait for trade to come to them; they go after it. The great Canadian railway systems have pushed themselves into the United States east, west and south, and a very large share of their mileages is in the United States, and a very large proportion of their profits are derived from their invasion of United States territory.

It stands to reason, that enlarged trade, which reciprocity will produce, will not only benefit our people at large, who thrive in proportion to the extent of their trade, which is also the life of railways, but that our Canadian railways with the enlarged traffic which reciprocity will bring, will flourish as never before. The development of the Canadian west, the increase of population, the increase of production by leaps and bounds, are swamping the railways with traffic already and enlarged trade intercourse, making greater demands of railway capacity willfurther congest their lines—but the railways will welcome this—their enterprise will meet the emergency.

SIR WILFRID'S ELOQUENT APPEAL ANSWERED WITH RINGING CHEERS

ST. JOHN, N.B., AUG. 28.—"To you, my fellow-countrymen of New Brunswick, I now appeal. The issue is in the hands of the Canadian people. Let New Brunswick do as she did last time; let Quebec do the same—and she will do it, let me tell you—(applause); let Ontario do as she did—and I hear she will do better—(loud applause)—and within three months the great boon of reciprocity will be ours. I appeal to you to support a policy of moderation and conciliation in developing a united Canadian nationhood. I appeal to you against the unholy alliance of the Nationalists in Quebec and the jingoes in the other Provinces. In my own Province I am branded by the trumpets and organs of Bourassa and his allies as a traitor to the French race. In other Provinces I am denounced by the jingoes as a traitor to the Empire. What I have sought to be is a true Canadian and a true British subject. I have kept the double connection before me throughout the whole of my public service. It has been to me my cloud by day and my pillar of fire by night. I have followed its leading, earnestly, faithfully, and, I hope, nay, I believe, with happy results, to the best development of the highest lines of our Dominion. I thank you for the four times you have endorsed that aim by your votes, and I depend upon you, I am sure, as sure as I am of the verdict of my own Province of Quebec, for the renewed triumph of that policy on September 21."

The Chief has been the means of arresting another alleged horse thief. Sunday morning a stranger hired a horse from Mr. Robt. Lindsay, liveryman, to go out in the country and be back by noon. The man, whose name is Frank Reynolds, did not return, and about ten o'clock Mr. Lindsay notified the Chief of Police. Chief Chilton kept the wires hot telephoning the different towns and villages in this district trying to locate the man and outfit. About two o'clock Monday he received word from Port Perry that Frank Reynolds had been arrested there on the information received from him. The Chief went to Port Perry and brought back his man.

What Shall I Wear?

The average woman is not fully decided what kind of suit she wants.

She has seen fashion pictures in style books, in magazines-has seen fashion plates. From all of these she has a general idea of what she wants.

At Elliot's she can see the suit that will meet her ideals, her suit, which combines all the new touches of fashion, a well fitting, tailored suit of individual style.

While we have the cheaper suits, it is to the higher class dressy garments, which we are featuring this season, that we more particularly wish to draw your attention. We have these in all their bewildering beauty and up-to-dateness, we show many hundreds of different styles and hardly two alike.

COATS AND WRAPS

The slender silhouette coat cut in straight lines is correct this season, it is very graceful and becoming. The American and the French designers are constructing their new models on these lines.

The vogue for the large collar is very strong, and many novel cuts are shown, among them are round, pointed and sailor effects, frequently these collars reach into revers but some only reach to the shoulders.

Need effects are also much in evidence.

ELLIOT'S DEPARTMENT SHOWS GREAT VARIETY

Never before was there such a beautiful variety of ladies' garments shewn, Scotch tweeds, herring-bone effects, fancy mixtures and double faced cloths are all prominently featured.

The double faced cloths promise to be the favourites for the season.

These reversible cloths are shown in a great variety of weaves, and sometimes in a combination of two weaves, as, for example, a smooth surface on one side and a rough effect on the other.

Some have a plain colour on one side and a stripe or a check or a plaid on the other, while others have two contrasting colours.

The majority of these cloths have a rough effect which promises to be unusually strong this season.

Children's Blanket Coats

These dressy little garments come in all sizes up to 14 years of age, made from all wool navy cloth trimmed with red sash, red lined hood, red trimming and large brass buttons $3.50 to $6.50

Stork Department

On the third floor in our stork department you will find everything that a baby can wear.

Girl's Department

We show a great range of girls' dresses in all the new cloths made up in the new styles of the season.

Millinery

Miss Noble with her staff will be in the millinery parlors on Friday The high conical hat will be quite the run this winter, but we will describe them more fully later.

low Longboat Won The Most Exciting Foot Race Ever Run In Canada

(By Lou E. Marsh.)

You've got to hand it to your Uncle Tomas Longboat

He won Saturday night's big four-cornered twelve-mile challenge race, after a mighty struggle, by the depth of his tawny chest. It was a thrilling finish and a magnificent contest.

Though the Indian only won by a scant foot and a half from A. E. Wood, the classy Englishman, he had to be a whole lot the best, for to win he had to race every man in the field into submission.

They harried and harassed the bronze wonder from the first crack of the pistol, and he didn't win the race until the tape was breasted and the last foot of ground covered. They were all out to beat the idol of Canada, and tried in every legitimate way to do it.

Wood, the outsider in the contention from the public's point of view, but the choice of the experts, was the boy who furnished all the contention from seven miles on, and he fought the sinewy Redskin every inch of the way.

It was a race that kept the 9,000 spectators shouting and cheering for a solid hour and more. It was not only a bitterly-fought contest, but a classic performance, as the time shows.

One-two and two-fifths!

The fastest twelve miles Tom Longboat ever ran in his life.

Twelve miles, and Alfie Shrubb, the greatest runner from two to twelve miles the world ever knew, beaten over half a lap, soundly trounced. That alone tells the tale of a mighty struggle. The time (1.02.2-5) and the defeat of Alfie Shrubb in a race in which he stood up and ran all the way.

And when it was all over the crowd swarmed upon the field, an avalanche of shouting, cheering, gesticulating people, who besieged the officials to hear the result. Only those who were right at the tape knew who had won, and in the roar of delight which went up at the royal finish the official announcer's choice was about as easily heard as a penny whistle at a tatoo. The declaration that the Indian had won by a foot was passed from lip to lip, and the exultant Canadians carried him around on their shoulders, while hundreds did impromptu war dances on the sward. Shrubb, who was third, half a lap back, and Hefferon fourth, a lap behind, had to burrow through the crowd to reach the mark.

When Tom Flanagan pulled the gun Alf. Shrubb started off like a sprinter, and Wood and Hefferon, coming from the top, pinned the Indian in on the pole. He didn't like it a little bit, and with a snort of anger took back and went up outside with a mighty stride and clung to Shrubb. When Shrubb found the Indian right up he quit the sprint, but carried the bunch a mile in 4.40—a right smart mile.

Shrubb climbed right in on the second mile and kept it fairly hot. They did two miles in 10.55, and then the Indian woke the crowd up by tearing to the front at three miles and leading a couple of miles.

Shrubb tried them out in the fourth mile, but everybody was up and doing, so he let Hefferon to the front. The South African, though very sore from the five-mile race two weeks ago, and competing contrary to doctor's order, injected a while lot of ginger into affairs up to the fifth mile, where he weakened, and after that he was content to hang on. At four and a half miles Wood suddenly shot to the front and away he went like a wildman, taking the lead from the Indian. He looked to be away, but the Indian lengthened out his stride and, crowding on full steam, tucked right in beside the sturdy Englishman and there he stayed for lap after lap.

The Essex man was sprinting desperately now and again, but the Indian hung on with a grin as wide as a barn door. He simply laughed at the speedy Woods' efforts to shake him, and the crowd bubbled over with delight.

Once in a while the Onondaga would dash up alongside and look Wood over but Wood only ran the harder. About the seventh mile Shrubb, who had been galloping along in excellent style, came up and looked the Indian over, but Tom grinned at him and he went back.

Soon the pace commenced to tell. Hefferon cracked first and went back, and then Shrubb commenced to falter. The sprints of the desperate Wood were having their effect on all but the Indian. At eight miles Shrubb was back 100 yards. Taking advantage of a lull at 9 miles he did even get back into the parade, but Wood fairly hit it up again. He didn't want the agile little Sussex galloper with them when the final effort came, so he ripped in a lively half, and Mr. Shrubb said "Farewell." After that he was content to hang on and beat the South African. The Indian let Wood make the pace all the way, but no matter how hard he tried he couldn't shake him any more than he could his shadow. Goodness knows he tried hard enough. He slammed in sprint after sprint at 10 and 11 miles, and the crowd made a noise that woke Hamilton as the tireless Indian loped up alongside of him at any old time.

Then Wood eased up to save himself for the final dash. At 11 1-2 miles Longboat commenced to feel him out, but Wood responded to every sprint. On the bell lap the Indian shot to the front, with the Englishman at his shoulder, and so they hit the head of the stretch.

There was a hush as the final sprint commenced, and then a prodigious shout as the Indian was seen to be holding his own.

Fifty yards from the wire there was another hush and then a hurrah from the old countrymen. Wood had pulled up even with the Canadian idol.

"Wood wins! Wood wins! Wood!" they roared.

The shout galvanized the Indian. He made one last despairing effort, and pushed his chest ahead—with heads thrown back, mouths open, eyeballs bulging, gaunt, pictures of desperate endeavour, they staggered on. Neither had an ounce left. Wood couldn't get up ,and the Indian couldn' get farther away, and so they hit the tape, the Indian to win by a stingy foot and a half. The roar that went up shook the stand. In his interest in the finish of the race Shrubb eased up, and the plucky Hefferon almost caught him. Both Wood and the Indian were seized and held upon their tottering knees by friendly hands. It was a wonderful race.

"Hack" And Gotch Are Supremely Confident Grapple Next Monday

Will Hackenschmidt's strength and endurance be too much for the acknowledged cleverness of Frank Gotch in their coming bout at Comiskey Park Labor Day? This question seems to be the all important one concerning the big wrestling match. Gotch, the world's champion, is the cleverest man in the mat game to-day. He knows innumerable tricks, and invents new ones daily. He is the originator of the deadly toe hold, which made Hackenschmidt cry "enough" in their last battle.

Reports from Humboldt, where Gotch is training, are to the effect that the Iowan excels in tricks of all kinds and that he has mastered a new one which will pry Hackenschmidt loose from the floor. Gotch is the most optimistic man in the world as to the outcome of the battle. He contends he will be so fast that the Russian will not be able to get a hold on him and that he will make the "lion" go to the defensive from the start. Gotch has studied out several offensive moves and asserts he will win easily and in much faster time than it took the last time the two men met.

HACKENSCHMIDT CONFIDENT

If Gotch is optimistic, Hackenschmidt is even more so. At the present time he weighs 227 pounds and says he is getting heavier, notwithstanding the tremendous amount of work he does every day to harden his muscles. He is relying upon his strength and really marvelous endurance to carry him through the mill. Hackenschmidt acknowledges that Gotch is the cleverest man in the game, but he puts forward the assertion that he will be able to undermine the strength of the champion with his far greater strength, and in the end will be returned the winner.

All athletic experts who have seen Hackenschmidt since he landed in Chicago agree that he is in perfect condition. He has taken off all his superfluous fat in his workouts in England and on the trip over, and right now he is a mass of bone and muscle. His pulling powers, the ones most essential to the wrestler, work as an oiled machine. His shoulder muscles and those of his arms and legs are in perfect control even at this time. He has strength combined with stamina, and these two are expected to be his main assets in his bout.

Some will question whether or not Hackenschmidt is game after his showing in the last Gotch match. Dr. B. F. Roller, who has charge of the Russian's training camp, and who is conditioning the big fellow for the supreme test, has the following to say as to Hack's gameness and also as to the reasons Hack quit in the last bout:

ROLLER MAKES IT CLEAR

I deny that Hackenschmidt is not a game man. It is true he gave up in his last match with Gotch, but he went as far as he could in his untrained and unprepared condition. The match lasted over two hours, and Hackenschmidt was forced to bear the brunt of the work during the whole of the battle. He practically carried Gotch's weight for the entire time. And he was forced to work all of the time to keep the shifty Iowan from putting his shoulders to the mat. It looks to me that the foregoing denotes gameness in the extreme."

Hackenschmidt put in a strenuous day at his North Side camp yesterday. He shook off the blanket of slumber at 6 a.m. and rushed into the waves for an hour. He next sat down to a breakfast which would make a man with indigestion look on with envy and then question the possibility of one man getting away with such a load of things. Hackenschmidt is an eater and his one hobby is his stomach.

After breakfast he picked up the speeders of his camp and did several miles on the road. Coming back, he took up handball for a couple of hours, and then one more bath before lunch. The lunch appears to be a meal for a regiment, but Hack looked for more after a half hour's eating, and his imported German chef appeared anxious until the "Lion" decided he had enough.

WRESTLES WITH FOUR

After a short rest, Hack was at it again. He took on Dr. Roller for an hour's work on the mat, and then worked with Johann Koch, Gus Schoenlein and Tom Jenkins, his wrestling partners. Hack then looked for more world's to conquer and Jim Flynn, white heavyweight champion pugilist and newest acquisition to the camp, was the object his eye fell upon. Flynn was mauled and tossed about the ring for about a half hour and then Hack disappeared into his dressing rooms. It looked as if the day was over, but Hack had one more fooler. He appeared again in his bathing trunks and made for the big drink once more. He swam for about an hour and just as the sun disappeared he was cleaned up and in his well-to-do clothes ready for the last meal.

If work is going to win the Labour Day battle, Hack has it won already. With his strength and endurance he looks to be able to do the things to the Gotch cleverness he asserts he can. There is no doubt that it will be the greatest wrestling match the world has ever seen.

Fanny Brough's "Fortune."

Thousands of the poorer members of the theatrical profession in London have cause to bless the name of Miss Fanny Brough, who works indefatigably on behalf of the Theatrical Ladies Guild, which has for its object the providing of clothing for needy actresses and assistance in maternity cases. It would seem, however, judging from the following amusing story which Miss Brough tells, that her work is misunderstood by some people. "The other day," says the famous actress, "I was enjoying one of my pastimes, riding outside a horse-bus, when I heard myself being discussed by two ladies in front of me. One of them pointed to a placard bearing my name and said, 'It's extraordinary the money people on the stage make, but they don't make it out of their salaries; that Fanny Brough makes quite a fortune out of a second-hand clothes shop!'"

RICHARD HALL & SON LIMITED

A GRAND RALLY HELD AT HAVELOCK

Mr. Kerr, Liberal Candidate, and Mr. J. W. Curry, K.C., Speak---Electors Hear Reciprocity Agreement Discussed.

The public meeting held in the Town Hall, Havelock, on Saturday evening last, in the interests of Mr. F. D. Kerr, Liberal candidate for East Peterborough, was a grand success. The hall was packed to its utmost capacity and the speakers were given a most attentive hearing. There was present a large number of farmers from the township of Belmont, and they appeared very much interested in the clear and forcible manner in which the reciprocity issue was explained by the several speakers. Mr. Kerr, the candidate, was assisted by Mr. J. W Curry, K.C., of Toronto.

The chair was occupied by Councillor Wm. Weese, and the first speaker was Mr. W. T. Curtis, of Havelock, who briefly expressed himself as strongly in favour of reciprocity in natural products with the United States.

Mr. F. D. Kerr, the Liberal candidate, was received with hearty applause, and after a few words of friendly greeting to the electors, he launched out into an address which caught and held the undivided attention of the audience. He pointed out that reciprocity would be mutually beneficial to both Canada and the United States, and showed how the removal of the tariff tax would assist the consumer on both sides of the boundary. At the present time there was a very large trade between Canada and the United States, and of this trade a very large percentage would now be on the free list, and in some cases a scaling down of the American tariff, so that it would not exceed the Canadian tariff. He showed that reciprocity was not something to be afraid of, but a sensible business arrangement for the benefit of the community. Mr. Kerr pointed out that he Ottawa Citizen (Conservative) advocated the present reciprocity agreement; that Hon. F. W. G. Haultain, Conservative Leader in Saskatchewan, and his entire following also in the Provincial House, favoured it, as did also Mr. F. F. Lillicrap, the well known Conservative, of Lakefield. After showing how Sir John Macdonald had favoured reciprocity as long as he lived, he called on all the Conservatives of Belmont and Havelock to cling to the teachings of Sir John Macdonald, Mr. Haultain, Mr. John Henon, Conservative M.P., and other Conservatives who preferred principles to party. They stand out boldly for reciprocity. Opportunity to vote for party came twice at least every four or five years, but the opportunity to vote for reciprocity, so long sought for, only came but once, and he urged all who had the best interests of the country at heart, to cast party aside by voting for Kerr and larger markets. The candidate explained how that the bitter opposition came from over protected interests and protested against J. W. Flavelle and other millionaires standing in the way of the farmer and the toiler, getting the best and fullest results of his labours. Mr. Kerr keenly dissected Mr. Sexsmith's recent speeches, and from Mr. Sexsmith's own speeches, he showed how East Peterborough's member had determined on opposition to reciprocity from party prejudice and without even waiting to hear Mr. Fielding explain the provisions of the reciprocity agreement. Mr. Kerr showed how the agreement, if it did not prove satisfactory, could be terminated in 24 hours.

After dealing with the many articles of the farm which would benefit by reason of reciprocity, Mr. Kerr concluded a splendid address by a strong and convincing exposure of the Borden-Sexsmith-Monk-Bourassa alliance, and he showed clearly that the race and creed cries raised by Conservatives, was simply for the purpose of gaining power. At the conclusion of his address the Liberal candidate was greeted with rounds of applause.

MR. CURRY.

Mr. J. W. Curry, K.C., of Toronto, delivered a masterful address, carrying home conviction to the minds of the audience. Reciprocity, Mr. Curry showed convincingly, was not a party, but a public question and that all public men of every shade of politics had always favoured it, until the time came that Mr. Borden and a portion of his followers had been stampeded by a few monopolists into opposing a measure intended and planned for the public benefit. He clearly demonstrated that, in introducing reciprocity, the Government was actuated by a desire to benefit the people. He denied the absurd story that the U. S. had clubbed Canada into reciprocity and proved that on the other hand, it was a pact entered into by both governments in a friendly spirit, and with the intention of it proving, as it will prove, beneficial to the masses on both sides of the boundary. The manufacturers had been unreasonably frightened, but many who had studied the agreement, saw that it was in practically all respects a tariff dealing with natural products. Many of these manufacturers were themselves publicy stating that they now favoured the agreement. The Government, in introducing reciprocity, was carrying out the wishes expressed so strongly by the farming community. Some of the farm products of Canada naturally sought by the American market, were handicapped by a high tariff. He showed how the reduction in the American tariff of the item of cream alone, had given thousands of dollars to the Ontario farmer. Canadian apples and fruits always commanded the highest prices as did Canadian wheat, barley, horses and other farm products, but the Canadians, by reason of the U. S. tariff, was in all these things at a great disadvantage, and the farmers were, by the reason of the same, losing untold sums of money yearly. Trading north and south for years had not affected the loyalty of British Columbia. He predicted an increase of loyalty by reason of the increased prosperity introduced by reciprocity. President Taft and his chief supporters had clearly, in their speeches, shown that reciprocity was merely a sensible trade arrangement, and that annexation was not only undesirable but unthought of.

Mr. Curry's address will not soon be forgotten of those who had the privilege of hearing him.

The meeting closed with cheers for the King, Sir Wilfrid Laurier and the Liberal candidate, and although the speaking was not concluded until a late hour, the electors, in large numbers, thronged around the Liberal candidate and Mr. Curry, after the meeting, and expressed their approval in no uncertain manner, of the convincing addresses they had delivered.

FRASERVILLE

Examiner Special:

FRASERVILLE, AUG. 29.—The harvest is about finished in this vicinity now, but the farmers have been unable to proceed with fall ploughing on account of the dry weather. The soil was dried out and very hard. The meadows were literally burned with the sun and yesterday's rain had a material effect upon things. The hoe crops are in some places very poor owing to the lack of rain.

A LUXURIANT GROWTH OF HAIR

Does Not Follow Neglect of the Scalp

Aside from combing it when they think necessary many people give no attention whatever to their hair. Then, when the hair begins to fall out, it never occurs to them that their trouble is the result of personal carelessness.

An occasional application of Newbro's Herpicide will not only prevent loss of hair, but permits a luxuriant growth.

Herpicide kills the germ that causes dandruff and to this germ most hair losses are attributable. It keeps the scalp clean and free from dirt, allowing the hair to grow unhampered by accumulation of dandruff.

Newbro's Herpicide is sold by all druggists and its manufactures have such confidence in its germ destroying power that they authorize all druggists to guarantee the one dollar size bottles to do as claimed or money refunded.

Applications may be obtained at good barber shops.

The train finally proceeded on its way about 45 minutes late, but without any serious damage resulting.

HASTINGS, AUG. 28.—The excursion to Keene and Hiawatha on Wednesday afternoon, under the auspices of the Ladies' Aid of the Presbyterian Church, was well patronized, and those who attended were well pleased with the outing.

The funeral of the late Mrs. Quigley, a former resident of Hastings, was held on Wednesday morning to the R. C. church for service, and from thence to the cemetery for interment. Deceased had been ailing for some time and death was not unexpected. She leaves to mourn her loss a family of grown-up sons, who have the sympathy of all in their bereavement.

Mrs. Borland and daughter of Peterborough, are guests of her brother, Mr. Al. Parsons, town.

Word reached town on Wednesday evening that an old resident of Hastings had passed away in Toronto, in the person of Mrs. A. Anderson, who, with the exception of the last two years, had spent her life here, and was widely and favourably known by a wide circle of friends. While in Hastings she was a faithful and efficient worker in the Methodist church and her departure for the city left a vacancy, which was extremely difficult to fill. She leaves to mourn her loss a large family of sons and daughters, who will keenly feel the loss of a most loving and devoted mother. The remains were brought to Hastings for interment. Much sympathy is felt for the bereaved family, who are left orphans, Mr. Anderson having died a number of years ago.

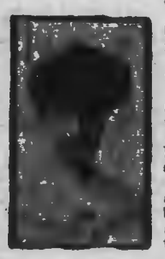
THE EVENING CHIT-CHAT

By Ruth Cameron

ARE you fond of cats?

If you are, whether you are moved to emulation or not, surely you will be interested to hear about the unique way in which one woman is trying to earn her living.

She has established what she calls the Kermit Kattery. It is, as the name has already suggested to you, a boarding home for pet cats. In addition to boarding the animals she also raises Persian cats, crates cats for shipping out of town, gives advice as to the care of well cats or treatment of sick cats, sells cat remedies and such cat specialties as flea combs, cat collars, cat baskets, etc.



The work has not been extremely lucrative so far but she has reason to expect it will be much more so in the future.

Her story of how she happened to go into this unique work is as follows:

"Some three years ago last December a friend of mine asked me to take care of a black Persian kitten while she went to New York. This I agreed to do and also to care for two of another woman's cream Persian males which she was going to show at a cat show and to comb them and brush them into 'show condition.' This friend was taken sick while away at a cat show and late one Sunday afternoon her husband telephoned me that she was coming home with a doctor, a nurse and—five or six cats! And would I take care of the cats until she was better?

"We have been at the boarding business ever since, and now we feel lonesome if there are not at least twenty cats on the premises. We have raised the beautiful Angoras or Persians though, so far, there has not been very much money in that. The boarding of pet cats whose owners want a vacation or are going to close the house for some reason is the most profitable part of the business. We have taken in some sick cats whose troubles were not contagious or infectious and in most cases have been successful in restoring them to their owner's arms and love.

"Of course, we have had to have a large yard wired in with chicken wire top and sides and divided so as to keep the cats separate, but that expense is practically over now.

"For boarding well cats we have one dollar a week; if ill or needing extra care, we charge two dollars.

"I think that the prime requisite for success in this particular business, which is certainly well suited for women, is that one must first, last and all the time be a passionate lover of cats; not animals in general, but cats as a class by themselves.

"To conduct a cat boarding business one must be ready to give up time and sleep and to eat when convenient and not on time. One must have plenty of antiseptics ready for instant use in case of bite or scratch, must eliminate fear absolutely from one's mind and put away rugs, cushions, and all kinds of bric-a-brac, and find ones amusement and pleasure in the care of cats, and take for much of ones payment the satisfaction and pleasure that comes from knowing that one is preaching a daily sermon from the text about the 'sparrow falling to the ground and knowing that in caring for the dumb animals that God has seen fit to create and place with us we are doing His work just as truly as if we founded million dollar libraries or hospitals."

As Hon. George P. Graham put it at Brockville: "Did you ever hear of the removal of taxation on food increasing the cost of living?"

OSLER RIGHT; YOUTH SUCCEEDS AGE

Gray Hair Is First Sign of Age. Harmless Remedy Restores to Natural Color.

Osler isn't the only man who turns down old age. In the business world the "young man" is always the one who picks the plums. It is an age of "new thought," "new talent," etc., and the old man is passed by in the race.

One of the first signs of coming age is the appearance of gray hairs. When you see them, act promptly. Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Hair Remedy will correct this sign, which so often deceives people into thinking that age is really upon them. It is a well-known fact that Sage and Sulphur will darken the hair. Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur combines these old-time remedies with other agents, which remove dandruff and promote the growth of the hair.

The manufacturers of this remedy authorize the druggists to sell it under guarantee that the money will be refunded if it fails to do exactly as represented.

This preparation is offered to the public at fifty cents a bottle, and is recommended and sold by all druggists.

Engine House Is Repaired

The gap in the G. T. R. engine shed recently made by the sudden starting of an engine, is now under the operation of being boarded up.

It is anticipated that a larger shed will ultimately be built on a site yet to be determined upon, and the present spot utilized for sidings; hence the boarding.

An Appeal To Wives

No more terrible affliction can come to any home than the excessive use of intoxicants by husband or son. Think of the money wasted in Drink, which is needed in the home to purchase food and clothing. If you have a drinking Husband or Son, give him Orrine. We are so sure that Orrine will do what is claimed for it, that if after a trial no benefits are derived from it, we will refund the money.

ORRINE is prepared in two forms, No. 1, secret treatment, a powder, absolutely tasteless and odourless, given secretly in food or drink. ORRINE No. 2 in pill form, is for those who desire to take voluntary treatment. ORRINE costs only $1.00 a box. Write for Free Orrine Booklet (mailed in plain sealed envelope) to ORRINE CO., Orrine Building, Washington, D. C. ORRINE is recommended and is for sale in this city by Wm. Madill

TRAINING CLASSES

Training classes have been started for the members who are thinking of going in for distance running this fall, and if you have a hobby for running, come around and get out with the bunch every Monday, Wednesday and Friday. Do not forget that if you intend to run in the Examiner road race, you had better get started, and here is your chance.

The baths will be closed on Wednesday, Thursday and Friday of this week, for repairs, but will be opened on Saturday afternoon.

TIRED-OUT KIDNEYS

Kidney troubles are so frightfully common Food I was in a terrible condition, mon because the kidneys are so easily upset by overwork or excesses of eating red drinking. Cure is effected not by whipping them on to renewed effort, but by awakening the action of liver and bowels by the use of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills. This rests the kidneys and makes them well. Backache and urinary disorders then disappear.

GREAT DEBATER IS F. E. SMITH

Something About the Parliamentarian Who Has Risen to Fame and a Place in the Privy Council

The son of a clever father, the Right Hon. F. E. Smith, M.P., one of the leading Parliamentary orators of the Old Land, has had to take time and opportunity by the beard. His brightness at school won him a scholarship which took him to Oxford. University progress was as easy to him as sliding. He won everything he wanted to win. He went to the bar. He never was a briefless barrister, for he received briefs as soon as he was entitled to wear a horse-hair wig. He took to politics. He got returned to Parliament. He blossomed in a night into a dashing, slashing, keen debater. Conservative associations through the country panted to have him on their platforms. The Birkenhead boy, starting life with very little of "the one thing needful," has marched straight ahead. He is "out to win." If anybody gets in his way, he elbows him.

When in a nigh deserted House of Commons he rises to speak, and the announciator clickingly spells his name in the various Westminster rooms, known as "the precincts of the Chamber," it is like the lilt of the Pied Piper of Hamelin, for short members, tall members, skinny members, fat members, hasten instantly to hear. Some of the old men of his own party are incapable of understanding his success. Sharpness of tongue is not consistent with dignity! Who is F. E. Smith anyway? Who was his grandfather? But Mr. Smith pushes ahead and does not heed. They cheer him because he puts their case better than they could put it themselves. It is in private they tell you his language is "too much like that of Lloyd George."

Like Disraeli, he has a penchant for phrases. They are polished and they are sharp, and they make wounds. When Mr. Balfour has a cut at an opponent the injury heals, and the opponent is rather flattered. When Mr. Smith cuts there is a sore which festers. When he has flung diatribe at the enemy, the enemy has been known to cry "Gutter!" in resentment. But, unlike Disraeli, who made a failure of his first speech in Parliament, Mr. Smith's first speech was like a cavalry charge.

Because he had to fight his own battle, he has had to joust with fortune, Mr. Smith has a much better grip on public opinion than many of the gentlemen amongst whom he sits. Pompous platitudes are not in his line. The Unionists have got to move with the times Now and then he gets ahead of his party If he cannot push his party he does his best to pull it. But he never scampers away.

Some people compare Churchill and Smith. The comparison is as useless as a comparison between Thackeray and Dickens. They are stirring, rousing speakers; but there the similarity ends. Mr. Churchill has the statesman in him; Mr. Smith has had no opportunity of showing statesmanship. But judge them both on a level as speakers. When Mr. Churchill is talking on a particular subject you are conscious his eye is roaming the whole political horizon, and that he has in mind the exact place the subject holds in the landscape. He has breadth of vision. Mr. Smith, with his shrewdness, has not yet revealed that quality. He is the lawyer, and the cross-examining lawyer all the time. His speeches are like cross-examinations turned into the box. The training of the lawyer is in all Mr. Smith's speeches. As a dissector, clear-minded, probing, ruthless, Mr. Smith has no equal in the House of Commons. But it is cross-examination all the time. Mr. Smith is a master in proving the other side is wrong; he concentrates on that style of polemics. Mr. Churchill, especially during the last year or two, pursues the opposite plan; he is concerned in proving his own side is right. Again, Mr. Churchill has the human touch in him; he can be sentimental and appeal to the heart.

Mr. Smith has no sentiment in him. He is analytical. With a flash of logic he can prove his case; but he has no humaaness which will bring a lump into the throat of his listeners.

Yes, Mr. Smith has personality. His skill, his mental agility, his industry, his tremendous power of debate seasoned with invective, are all wonderful. These will carry him a long way.

Mr. Smith was recently made a Privy Councillor.

George W. Perkins Recalls a Humorous Western Advertisement

George W. Perkins, who has withdrawn from the banking-house of J. P. Morgan & Co. to devote himself to the great public questions of the day, said at a recent dinner in New York:

"Ours is a country of phenomenal prosperity. There is no such prosperity anywhere else on earth. Here we have work for all."

Mr. Perkins smiled.

"In fact," he said, "we have such a scarcity of labor here that the Western farmer was hardly joking when he inserted in the newspapers this 'want ad.':

"'Wanted—Harvest hands. Hired girl blonde and pleasant. Phonograph music during meals. Pie three times a day. Six lumps of sugar to each cup of coffee. Hammocks, leather divans, cosy corners, feather-beds. Rising-hour, 10 a.m. Organ concert every evening. Free chewing and smoking. Come one, come all."

LABOUR CONDITIONS HERE DURING MONTH OF JULY

Mr. J. Arthur Sharp, correspondent for Peterborough, Ont., and district, to the Labour Gazette, reported as follows, for July:

General Conditions of Labour.

Active conditions prevailed during July, the building trades continuing very busy. The iron trades remained about the same as last month. The Canadian General Electric Company's power plant has been shut down temporarily during the rebuilding of the pole line and the construction of two new circuits from the water works dam down to its factories. The Peterborough Light and Power Company is supplying it with 1,200 h.p. for 24 hours per day, until such time as the new power line is completed. Hon. J. R. Stratton and Mr. J. H. McClellan, superintendent of the Trent Valley Canal, have waited on the Department of Railways and Canals with a view to having the remuneration of the lock masters, bridge tenders and overseers along the line of the Trent waterways increased; the appointments will be made during the present month, and the increases will date from April 1, 1911. The Thursday summer half-holiday which was granted the clerks other seasons, was granted to them again this season. This affects all the retail stores in the city. Wholesale and retail merchants reported business very good.

Condition of Local Industries.

Agriculture. — Farmers were very busy haying and report a fair crop. Reports so far of the crops are very favourable.

Lumbering—All the sawmills in the district have been running to their full capacity.

Manufacturing.—Activity prevailed in all lines.

Condition of Particular Trades.

The building trades were active, especially bricklayers, masons, carpenters, lathers, plasterers, plumbers and builders' labourers. Metal workers, iron moulders, coremakers, and machinists were active. Electric workers and linemen were very busy. Metal polishers, buffers and brass workers were active. Woodworkers, cabinet makers, upholsterers and varnishers were well employed. Printers, pressmen, bookbinders and allied trades were active. Journeymen tailors and garment workers were busy. Butchers and meatcutters had a good month. Cigarmakers found trade fair. Leather workers and saddlers were active. Railway and street railway employes were well employed. Steamboat men were active. Teamsters and express men were well employed. Unskilled labour was in good demand.

Port Hope.—Material is being delivered at Fraserville, Millbrook, and other places in the vicinity for the new power line which is being put through from Healey Falls via Millbrook and other places, which it touches with power. The work is being done by the Midland Construction Company.

It was moved by Mr. Braund, seconded by Mr. McClelland that the cheque be handed to the Chairman to reimburse him in part for money he advanced to J. Davis, to pay for a nurse.—Carried.

A statement was read from J. F. Little for the Manager, that the balance at credit of the Board in the Bank of Toronto on June 30th, was $100.39.—Received.

NEWSBOY TO OPERA SINGER

Plenty of romance has been crowded into the twenty-seven years of the life of Mr. B. Nevada Landino, who ten years ago was a New York newsboy, and is now a grand opera tenor singer. Mr. Landino has said that at Cleveland he filled up his spare time by shoe-blacking, while later on he worked side by side at cigarette-making with Rosa Pastor, of Whitechapel, who afterwards married a millionaire. To be slapped on the back by Mascagni, who said "Bravo!" is another incident that the tenor recalls with pride. Landino speaks four languages—German, French and Italian, in addition to English; he has a repertoire of two hundred songs, and knows twenty operas, twelve of which he can sing without rehearsing.

"DERBYSHIRE'S GRAND OLD MAN"

Known by many as "Derbyshire's Grand Old Man," Mr. Edward Mason Wrench, of Buslow, celebrated his seventy-eighth birthday recently. Not only in medicine and surgery has Mr. Wrench made a name for himself, but he also had a distinguished career as a soldier during the stirring times of the Crimean War and Indian Mutiny. In the former he did duty in the trenches, and was present at the three assaults—one on the Quarries and the others at the Redan—and on the last occasion that the assault party went down to the trenches only half returned to the camp uninjured.

Disguised as Postman

Giving evidence in a police court case at Abertillery, a policeman stated that he had disguised himself as a footman in a powdered wig, and also a coal-heaver, in order to obtain the evidence required.

OPPOSED TO POLYGAMY

In connection with the application of a Mohammedan woman, Sir. J. Wessels at Johannesburg recently decided that no person could bring into the Transvaal more than one wife. A protest has now been made by the Indian community to the Minister of the Interior, in which it is pointed out that polygamy is a recognised institution in India.

Prefers Indian Dress

A growing number of Indians are adopting European dress. For our own part we think this is very much to be regretted in itself. We wish Indians would retain their own easy and dignified dress, and spare their money for something more worth having than cheap and ugly imitations of European clothes.—Madras Weekly Mail.

The Racing Maiden

She Would Marry No Man Who Could Not Outrun Her

By P. A. MITCHEL

Copyright by American Press Association, 1911.

In the Vatican museum at Rome there is a statue of a Greek girl dressed for running a race. Her body is covered by a single knit garment, while her limbs are bare. The statue takes one who gazes upon it far back toward the dawn of our civilization.

In the Grecian archipelago at a time when this running maid of the Vatican lived was an island governed by King Artagones. He had no sons to succeed him, but a daughter, Thessia, had been born to him, who grew up a very shapely woman. From childhood she evinced a deep interest in athletics and notwithstanding her royal birth took part in games which were open to women. When she was eighteen years old she captured many prizes in those athletic contests that were instituted by the king, her father, and was declared the champion runner.

Her success was a sad blow to the king, for it put into her head a fancy that became a fixed resolution which seriously interfered with his arrangement for the succession. There were several princes among the neighboring islands who were suitors for the princess' hand, any one of whom would have been acceptable to her father, but she announced that she would marry no man who could not outrun her. The strongest one of them accepted the condition, and a day was set for the trial. The king was present, and his subjects thronged the stadium. The prince was known to be well built for such encounters, and the princess was regarded invincible even by the strongest.

When the two stood on the starting line it was seen that the prince was far better developed above than below the waist, while the princess possessed a feature that was both a mark of beauty in a woman and an element for success in a foot race. She was very long of limb between the knee and the thigh. As soon as they started this superiority became evident. Her strides were longer than those of her competitor and slowly but surely carried her away from him. She easily won the goal, and the prince lost his suit as well as the race.

This result discouraged other royal suitors, and King Artagones was much troubled in the matter of a marriage for his daughter. He begged her to change the condition so that the fleetest among her suitors of royal blood might take the prize, but she would not consent. She would marry no man who could not beat her in a race, but she would marry any man who could outrun her. She was considered to be safe from matrimony on these terms, for she had come to be a marvel of fleetness. But the king was much concerned lest some herdsman or artisan or soldier in the ranks should enter the lists and carry off the prize.

One day there appeared in the market place of the capital a young man dressed in a loose costume never seen there before, who, taking position near a statue of Minerva, began to discourse on philosophy. At first he talked to vacancy, but one passing stopped to listen, then another and another till a crowd stood rapt in the stranger's eloquently expressed ideas. Every day he spoke, each day attracting a large crowd and exciting more attention till the whole city was interested in his discourses. Of course the reports of what was going on reached the ears of the king, and the stranger was summoned to the palace. He was received in the audience hall by the king, the royal family and the court and ordered to expound his philosophy. All were deeply impressed with his ideas. When he had finished he was introduced to those present, including the Princess Thessia, who found him as engaging in conversation as he was on the rostrum.

From this time the stranger's discourses in the market place grew less and his conversations at the palace more frequent. Among his audiences at the latter place the Princess Thessia was always to be found and listened to his words with rapt attention. Later he was summoned to lecture to her and her suit.

There was great curiosity to know whence the stranger hailed and what was his name. But on this subject he would give no satisfaction. Some said that he was from Athens, but of many persons who had visited that city none could be found who had ever heard him discourse or had even seen him there. Others averred that he was the son of a slave, who had developed a remarkable gift for oratory. The stranger neither confirmed nor denied any of these suppositions, continuing to devote himself to instructing the people and instilling into them higher motives for their living.

It became known that he was often at the palace, and it began to be whispered that the princess was coming under his influence. Every one wondered what would happen if she should fall in love with him. Since no one knew who he was, this result was the more to be deplored, and if it should turn out that he was, as had been reported, the son of a slave a marriage between him and the princess would bring down, figuratively speaking, the royal palace on their heads. Besides, the princess had declared that she would marry no man who could not outrun her, and this man made no pretense whatever to athletics.

One day, to the surprise of all, it was announced that the philosopher had made application for the princess' hand and had offered to abide by the conditions she had laid down for her suitors. The city was at once thrown into great excitement. One said that the race would be given to the stranger intentionally, another that when it should come off it would be found to be with the intellect instead of the legs, and in this case the stranger would surely win. All sorts of rumors were afloat, greatly exaggerated from those that had before been circulated, as to the identity of the suitor. A few of her admirers claimed for him a divine origin, hinting that he was the offspring of Minerva, beside whose statue he had begun his discourses, and that his mother had put in his head the words of wisdom that came from his mouth. At the other extreme were those who upheld the theory that he was a freed man.

That the race was to be a muscular one was soon evident from preparations at the stadium for the event, a large number of extra seats being put in for the occasion. It was rumored that the king was so incensed at the idea of his daughter's holding such a contest with an unknown person that he had consented to the race only on condition that if she failed to win she should be beheaded. Then those who admired and loved her were appalled by an edict from the king confirming this report. Suppose that by accident or temporary weakness she should lose the race, she would lose her head and they would lose their princess.

Such a contest between these two was enough to excite the citizens of the island, and when it was ordered that the princess should lose her head if she did not win everybody went wild to obtain admittance to the stadium where it was to take place. When the gates were opened a throng at once poured in that soon filled the inclosure, and they were closed again, leaving a multitude without.

The princess and the philosopher stood on the starting line, the princess with a loose cloak about her to protect her from the wind in lieu of the modern sweater. The philosopher wore the same baggy garments in which he had discoursed. When the order was given to make ready the princess threw off her cloak, while her antagonist doffed his upper garment and, unloosening a cord about his waist, dropped his nether covering on the ground.

An exclamation of surprise greeted his uncovered body. He proved to be a combination of bone and muscle, without a particle of superfluous fat.

Then came a conflict of feeling among the onlookers. Perhaps the princess would lose the race and her head! Perhaps she would that this splendid combination of muscles working under a soft white skin! What a match between such a perfect man and woman!

The stadium was an oblong affair sunk in the ground, with stone seats for the spectators. The terms of the race were that the contestants should go over the course on three laps, the goal being the starting point, where was also the royal box. The princess showed an exhilaration or, rather, an interest which clearly indicated that she knew her father's edict to be no mere threat. It was a matter of life and death with her. There was that about the stranger to indicate confidence. None knew whether he would doom to death the woman he desired by winning the race, but the prevalent belief was that he would win if he could.

The signal was given, and the runners were off like the wind. The stranger slowly fell behind, then maintained a trifling distance. When they passed the starting point after the first lap it was evident that both were putting forth every effort. On the second lap the stranger continued to lose, but midway round began to gain. When the point for the third lap was passed the two were neck and neck. The princess' breath was noticed to be coming hard, while that of her antagonist was improved.

The race was a long one, and when the runners neared the goal they came slowly, the stranger in the lead. Then it was seen that the princess was staggering. Suddenly a cry arose from the spectators. The stranger, seeing that their eyes were turned on the princess, looked back and saw her lying on the ground. Though he was within a hundred feet of the goal, he stopped, went back to her and lifted her in his arms. She was unconscious.

When the Princess Thessia came to herself, supported by her antagonist, she appeared before her father, the king. The stranger said:

"O king, I have not won the race against your daughter; therefore your royal edict does not condemn her. But I voluntarily gave up the contest that I might have won; therefore I have fulfilled her condition of marriage. It is time that I throw off all mystery. I am king of —, one of these Grecian islands, and I ask the hand of the princess as one equal in rank with yourself."

When those standing about the royal box heard this they set up a shout, which others more distant, knowing that good had come to the princess, took up, and the stadium rang with acclamations.

The young king married the princess, and eventually one island was ruled by one and her own island by another of her sons.

Umbrellas.

Umbrellas, which were first introduced in this country at Baltimore in 1770, were commonly mounted as evidences of effeminacy.

The Magic Lantern.

Roger Bacon, English philosopher, invented the magic lantern in 1260.

TRAGIC EXITS.

Dramatic and Unrehearsed Farewells of Footlight Favorites.

The great Lafayette's name will always be held in honor. He was the man who a few weeks ago in Edinburgh deliberately went back into the flames at the Empire Palace Music Hall to rescue his horse, and died in the attempt.

Too often tragedy lurks beneath the laughter of a music hall audience. One night in November, 1907, a full house was watching with delight the exquisite dancing of Mlle. de la Papimtada on the stage of the Apollo, at Berlin. La Papimtada was the star of the variety program, and every time that she appeared she fascinated the audience by her beauty and grace.

Just as she was executing the last rapid steps of her performance, which had lasted for nearly a quarter of an hour, she sank slowly to the stage with a low cry.

The audience, thinking it all part of the performance, applauded rapturously.

The curtain fell. A moment later the manager stepped out to the front.

"Ladies and gentlemen," he said solemnly, "Mlle. de la Papimtada is dead! I will ask you to disperse quietly."

Part of the turn of Daniel Lambert, a wrestler and gymnast, who was performing some years ago at the Rochdale Theatre of Varieties, was to go through a performance of hanging, taking a drop of no less than fifteen feet.

The audience flatly refused to believe that this part of the show was genuine, and Lambert was roundly hissed.

But on the fifth night the audience had its suspicions removed in a tragic manner. Lambert began his performance, but failed to catch the noose as usual, and it became fast at the back of his ear. He hung for a few seconds, and when the cord was loosened, fell a limp heap to the stage. He was apparently dead, but, being hurried off to the infirmary, he was pulled round. But he was suffering from concussion of the spinal cord, and was paralyzed.

There is more than one case on record of a music hall performer being shot dead in full view of the audience. One such occurred at the Middlesex Music Hall two years ago.

"Clementine, the Rifle-shooting Expert," was doing a William Tell act, in which she shot at glass balls balanced on the head and outstretched arms of her assistant. She had successfully shot away the balls on the man's arm; then she aimed at the one on his head. With the crack of her rifle the man tumbled over with a crash, and a shriek of alarm arose from the audience. He had been shot right through the head, and died a few hours later.

What is probably the most sensational incident ever seen on the stage occurred in August, 1906, at the theatre of Volsk, in Russia. Some months earlier a young man of independent means named Ivan Kusnetsoff had fallen madly in love with Nadine Rostoff, a girl employed as a dancer at the local theatre. They became engaged, and the wedding day had been fixed, when the girl wrote to Ivan and told him that they were not suited to one another, and that each ought to marry in their own station. She herself had decided to marry the juggler in the show.

Kusnetsoff disappeared without a word, and early in August Nadine married the man of her choice. On the night of August 12th she and her husband were performing together, when suddenly a young man bounded out of the audience with a pistol in his hand, and rushed upon the stage. It was Kusnetsoff, and before anyone could raise a hand to stop him, he had fired three shots, killing his rival and his bride on the spot. He then threw the pistol down and surrendered to the police.

Ancestral Worship in Korea.

"A sight on this day's journey which impressed us was the groups of people here and there by the graves of relatives going through forms of ancestral worship," reports a traveler in Korea. "This is looked upon as being more an evidence of filial piety than of spirit worship. In front of the grave a mat is laid, and upon the little Korean table is spread a variety of food of which the ancestral spirit may partake. Then the friends, with hands clasped, bow again and again their faces to the ground. How long the ceremony is continued we could not tell, as we were passing; but, looking back until we had turned and they were lost to view, there appeared no sign of its ceasing."

Not To Be Baffled.

Mrs. Bangs—So that pretty widow is really married so soon again, eh?

Old Bangs—You bet!

Mrs. Bangs—But her late husband's will expressly stipulated that if she took a second husband her legacy was to revert to his most distant relative.

Old Bangs—That's where she was foxy. She hunted up the relative and married him.

English Dukes.

"Duke" is the highest designation of nobility in England, and the first to be created in that country was the Black Prince, who took the title of Duke of Cornwall.

Crows and Parrots.

The sorrow of pet crows and parrots whose masters are removed by death is often noticed, and one very tame crow which was owned by a woman in Virginia would fly to the cemetery and sit for hours on a tree which stood near the grave of his beloved mistress.

Witchcraft.

Mosaic law enjoined death as the penalty of witchcraft in 1491 B. C.

Gilded Teeth.

New Zealand native ladies adopt the ebony hue for their teeth, while Japanese maidens complete their toilet by covering their teeth with gold leaf.

Lace.

Lace was in use in Venice at an early period, and it was known to the ancient Greeks and Romans. Its importation into England was prohibited in 1463 to protect the domestic manufacture.

SPEAKS IN NOVA SCOTIA

Sir Wilfrid Repeats His Triumph at St. John, N-B.—The Fishermen Are Enthusiastic Over Reciprocity Agreement

A GREAT MEETING

Digby, N.S., Aug 30.—Nova Scotia vies with her sister province of New Brunswick in intensely enthusiastic allegiance to Sir Wilfrid Laurier and the larger markets.

Sir Wilfrid was accorded an enthusiastic reception. Within an hour after the arrival of his vessel the sun was shining and Digby was at its best. Four special trains brought big delegations to swell the crowd, which insisted on acclaiming the Prime Minister wherever he went. The fishermen were particularly enthusiastic. Reciprocity is intensely popular with "the toilers of the deep."

Sir Wilfrid was joined here by Hon. W. S. Fielding, the "father of reciprocity," as the crowd affectionately designated him. The Minister of Finance came over from Yarmouth, and joined his leader for the balance of his Maritime Province tour. He shared with the Prime Minister the honors of the demonstration. Sir Frederick Borden also joined the party last evening.

Sir Wilfrid, in opening his address, took occasion to extend words of welcome to a number of United States visitors present, Digby being a popular summer resort. "The great mistake of American statesmen in the past," he observed, "has been that they have for years regarded Canada as a negligible quantity. But Canada has come to the front. She has attracted the attention of the world, and has won from her American neighbors the respect to which she is entitled as a neighbor."

The Premier dealt with the reciprocity issue in detail. Explaining the character of the obstruction in Parliament, Sir Wilfrid told the gathering how as leader of the House he was required day after day to hear it all. "Ah, my fellow-countrymen, don't you think after that I deserve something at your hands?" he asked, amid laughter. He looked forward with confidence to the hour of polling. From every part of the country came news of victory, he said. The Premier concluded with a glowing tribute to Mr. Fielding and his services to Canada.

Cheers For Veteran.

Toronto, Aug. 30.—Sir Richard Cartwright was given the reception of his life when he came to Toronto last night to speak in support of a step in the direction of what he has advocated all his life—freer trade conditions.

Getting at once into the question before the people, Sir Richard said he doubted if any project had ever been submitted which would benefit so surely and so quickly the majority of the people as the proposal with which he would deal. He thought that this policy might well have been received with more universal approval. On the contrary, he had never known any project to be met with more calumny and more misrepresentation. He had discussed the question of reciprocity with men of light and leading in England and the United States, and he had not met one who did not express the belief that reciprocity would be to the advantage of Canada.

The arguments against reciprocity he classified as puerile and purely selfish. It was absurd to make it a question of loyalty or disloyalty whether the farmers of Canada are to sell their produce in the United States.

Re-open Comfort Case.

Beamsville, Ont., Aug. 30.—The Comfort case, in which the coroner's jury found that the mother and her child, whose bodies were found some weeks ago in the reservoir, had both been murdered, will likely be re-opened. The authorities have discovered a man who is prepared to swear that a few weeks before the woman's death he enquired of a man with whom he was working as Edna Comfort passed them who she was. He says the man replied, "That is Edna Comfort, and I wish to God she was in the bottom of the reservoir."

Captured Burglar.

Brockville, Aug. 30.—A series of burglaries in Brockville lately have been traced by the police to John Healey and W. Burns, two local characters. The capture of Healey has been effected, and he makes a clean breast of his wrong-doing. Most of the booty was secured from parties to whom it was sold for whisky. Burns is still at large.

Perished In Burning House.

Quebec, Aug. 30.—P. C. Dauteuil, a well-known broker of this city, lost his life by asphyxiation in a fire which badly damaged his residence, situated in St. Roche's, at an early hour yesterday morning. His wife and daughter escaped by jumping, but are seriously injured. Two sons escaped through the rear of the house into the yard.

Farmer Badly Hurt.

Brampton, Ont., Aug. 30.—Angus McLeod, a farmer living a few miles north of Brampton, had both legs broken in a runaway accident on Monday.

Some of his neighbor's children ran alongside his wagon and he was playfully reaching out at them with the lines, when his horses, a young team, bolted.

Empress of Britain Sails.

Montreal, Aug. 30.—A cable received at the local office of the Canadian Pacific Railroad steamship lines states that the Empress of Britain finally sailed from Liverpool at 5.49 p.m. yesterday.

An Expensive Delusion.

Montreal, Aug. 30.—As an evidence of their intention to take no chances of losing their votes at the coming elections, hundreds of citizens are running to the City Hall these days and paying all their arrears of taxes, under the mistaken impression that to be indebted to the city at the time of the polling is to render one disqualified to the franchise, as is the case in municipal elections.

Monday $47,000 was paid into the city treasury for water taxes alone.

Woman Takes Poison.

Toronto, Aug. 30.—Mary Crawford, 172 McCaul street, tried to end her life yesterday by taking carbolic acid, and tried to hide her actions by taking a good percentage of whisky along with the poison. She dropped into unconsciousness at the corner of Queen and Sherbourne streets at noon, and was taken from there to St. Michael's Hospital, where she regained consciousness about 6 o'clock in the evening.

Girl Swims Golden Gate.

San Francisco, Aug. 30.—Miss Hazel Laugenour, 19 years old, a graduate of the University of California, is the first woman to swim across the Golden Gate. She made the distance, one mile and a quarter, in 1 hour and 28 minutes on Monday. She had a hard time in the last 400 yards, as the tide began to set against her and her head often went under the breakers.

WILKIE IS ACCUSED

Coroner's Jury Blames Him for the Death of Wife, Believing that the Beating She Received Hastened Demise

PERRY EXONERATED

Toronto, Aug. 30 "We find that Ellen Wilkie came to her death on Aug. 14, 1911, at 254 Claremont street, from the effect of injuries received from the hands of her husband, Edward Wilkie. We exonerate Frank Perry from any implication in her death."

This was the verdict of the jury at the inquest held at the morgue yesterday afternoon by Coroner Graham, regarding the death of Mrs. Ellen Wilkie.

Martin McManus, 2 Prefort place, testified that on Aug. 14, about 11 p.m., he saw Wilkie and wife struggling on the door step. Mrs. Wilkie was dragged into the house by the hair. He heard a woman screaming, and soon after a little girl came out of the house crying that her mother was being killed by her father. Two policemen then appeared on the scene, and the witness ran for a doctor. On returning he entered the house and found the woman lying on the floor and Wilkie beside her crying, "Oh, Nellie, Nellie!"

P. C. Kennedy, No. 316, testified that Wilkie had come to him about 6.30 p.m. and complained that his sister-in-law, Mrs. Crawford, was bringing in whisky to his wife. He at once went to the Wilkie home and found Mrs. Wilkie very excited. Wife and husband quarrelled in his presence, but no blows were struck. An empty whisky bottle lay on the table. P. C. Charles W. Johnson was notified of the disturbance at the Wilkie home about 10 p.m. Arriving there he found Wilkie and wife scuffling. Mrs. Wilkie asked him not to leave because her husband had been abusing her all night. After having quieted matters, he left about 11.10.

P. C. Joseph McElroy arrived at the Wilkie home about 11.30. Mrs. Wilkie had blood on her face and was bleeding at the nose, and complained that Wilkie had abused her, repeatedly exclaiming, "He beat me and choked me." She announced her intention of laying a charge against her husband, but soon after collapsed and died. Mrs. Mary Moore, 6 Prefort place, merely further verified the evidence of the constables.

Dr. S. Singer, 194 Simcoe street, who, with Dr. Silverthorn, performed the post-mortem, testified that Mrs. Wilkie had suffered from heart disease. He believed the treatment that she had received on the night of her death would and did hasten her death.

Frank Perry, a neighbor of the Wilkies, testified that Wilkie's stepdaughter had called him in to separate the struggle in which her father and mother were engaged. He testified that he merely acted as peacemaker, and did not, as alleged, strike Mrs. Wilkie.

Labor Pickets Fined.

Montreal, Aug 30.—Judgment was given by Magistrate McMahon in the Westmount police court yesterday regarding the five carpenters who were arrested three weeks ago in Westmount, on a charge of loitering and intimidation, when acting as pickets during the carpenters' strike.

Magistrate McMahon found the men guilty and sentenced them to pay between them a fine of $10, this amount to cover costs. Mr. Archambault gave notice of appeal on behalf of the carpenters.

Agricultural Machinery in Russia.

St. Petersburg, Aug. 30.—The Minister of Commerce has submitted to the Cabinet the draft of a bill which will be introduced in the Duma providing measures to foster the manufacture of agricultural machinery in Russia. It is proposed to permit duty free the entry of certain machines and machine parts and to offer manufacturers credit on easy term and reduce taxes in their favor.

WHITNEY WELL RECEIVED.

The Premier of Ontario Holds Meeting in Georgetown.

Georgetown, Aug. 30.—Sir James Whitney was greeted here last night by a gathering of over 2,000 people. On his arrival a monster procession was former, headed by the 30th Regiment band, and marched to the Drill Shed, which was filled to overflowing.

Mr. J. A. Willoughby was chairman, and Dr. A. W. Nixon, M.P.P., and D. Henderson, the Conservative candidate for Halton, were among those on the platform.

Sir James Whitney was greeted with loud cheering as he rose to address the assembly. It was his second visit to Georgetown, and he was pleased, he said, to be in a county that produced such men as Mr. Henderson, Dr. Nixon and J. R. Barber. He was here to do his duty, and he proceeded to strongly criticize the reciprocity treaty, which the Laurier Government, he contended, proposed forcing on the people of Canada.

Canada was prosperous now, and he did not believe Canadians would hand over their prosperity to the United States. In closing he asked the electors to support Mr. Henderson by voting in their own interests and defeating a treaty which would mean ruin to the markets of the farmer. The Premier was loudly cheered. Little Miss Elliott presented him with a bouquet.

Suspicious Circumstances.

St. Catherines, Aug. 30.—No light is thrown on the mysterious circumstances surrounding the death of Geo. Hodgins5a at Merritton last Friday, at the inquest which was resumed last evening before Coroner Joy. Medical testimony showed that death was due to drowning, and that the wounds found on the head and shoulder had been received before death and probably after the body entered the water, which was probably at the bridge near McLean's sawmill. Although deceased drew $31.95 the day before the drowning, no one had seen him spend much money the last night he was seen. The suspicious circumstances regarding the pockets being turned inside out remain unsolved. One witness, Charles Dodd, stated that when returning home at 1 o'clock he saw two strangers lying asleep near the town line crossing not far from the spot where the deceased was last seen by his brother.

The inquest was adjourned until Sept. 12 to give the police a chance to solve the problem regarding the pockets and wounds.

Lightning Struck Funeral.

Canonsburg, Pa., Aug. 30.—As the casket containing the body of Stephen Mastiowica, ticket seller in the ill-fated moving picture show, was being borne to the grave in the cemetery here lightning struck a tree under which the procession was passing, and the six pall-bearers were knocked down. John Hodie, a brother-in-law of the deceased, was rendered unconscious, and the mourners were panic-stricken. The casket dropped into the mud where it lay until the party had recovered from the shock. Hodie was not seriously injured, but it was necessary to remove him from the cemetery in a carriage.

HORSE THIEF WANTED HERE

At the regular session of the police court yesterday morning Frank Reynolds appeared before Magistrate Jackson, charged with stealing from Mr. Robt. Lindsay a horse, harness and buggy, on the 27th of August. It will be remembered that Reynolds is the youth who was arrested in Port Perry on information supplied by Chief Chilton. Reynolds is sixteen years old, and was in St. John's school for two years, until August 6, where he had been placed by his mother. His father has been dead for ten years. He was born in Toronto. He was working at No. 3 dam, Lakefield for a couple of weeks after leaving the school, when he left there; he got a horse and rig in Lakefield and drove to Peterborough, where he sold the outfit. He came to Lindsay on Saturday on the 1.10 train and put up at a local Jew's. The next morning he got up early and left the house without paying for his lodging, going to Lindsay's livery and hiring a horse, saying he wanted to drive out in the country and he would be back by noon. The story of his arrest in Port Perry is familiar to our readers.

He pleaded guilty to the charge of stealing the horse, harness and buggy to the value of $160 from Mr. Robt Lindsay and was remanded till next Thursday morning for sentence.

When in Port Perry Reynolds registered as Smith, and wanted to sell the animal for $135.00. Ten dollars was paid down and Reynolds said he would call again for the balance.

Chief Thompson of Peterborough, wired Port Perry and asked to have the youth arrested, but Chief Chilton had him nabbed first.—Post.

Reynolds brought the outfit to Peterborough and sold it to a man who was staying at the Munro House. He received a portion of the money at the time of the sale and was to have called the next day at 5 o'clock for the rest, but did not do so.

Little Damage From Frost.

Winnipeg, Aug. 30.—The report of the Canadian Northern Railway relative to crop conditions in the west was issued yesterday and shows that harvesting is general and that very little damage has resulted from the frost. In some districts as much as 90 per cent. of the crop is in shock. Cutting is advancing through northern Saskatchewan and southern Alberta. As these are latter districts were those in which most anxiety was felt, the report being one of optimism. In the Regina district slight frosts have occasioned some damage, but not of a severe nature.

Is Suing the City.

Montreal, Aug. 30.—Nino Pratico, the man who, owing to a mistake of the police, was sent to an insane asylum, has entered an action against the city for $2,000. Pratico and another man named Fortoria had been locked in a cell of the central police station on the same evening, and after examining them Dr. Picotte recommended that one of the men be sent before the recorder and the other sent to the asylum for the insane. It happened that the insane man was sent before the recorder and the sane one to the asylum. Hence the action of Pratico.

Abolish Conciliation Board.

London, Aug. 30.—The Royal Commission which is investigating the recent railway strike held its second session yesterday.

Fox, secretary of the Society of Locomotive Engineers, gave evidence as to the failure of conciliation boards to achieve the purpose for which they were authorized. He suggested that they be abolished, and that hereafter, when disputes arise, complaints be first submitted to the local officers of the company where the trouble occurred. Then, if the matter is not settled, it should be brought to a general meeting of men of the grade concerned, to elect a deputation to meet the management of the company, together with the trade union officers.

SPEAKS IN NOVA SCOTIA

Sir Wilfrid Repeats His Triumph at St. John, N.B.—The Fishermen Are Enthusiastic Over Reciprocity Agreement

A GREAT MEETING

Digby, N.S., Aug 30.—Nova Scotia vies with her sister province of New Brunswick in intensely enthusiastic allegiance to Sir Wilfrid Laurier and the larger markets.

Sir Wilfrid was accorded an enthusiastic reception. Within an hour after the arrival of his vessel the sun was shining and Digby was at its best. Four special trains brought big delegations to swell the crowd, which insisted on acclaiming the Prime Minister wherever he went. The fishermen were particularly enthusiastic. Reciprocity is intensely popular with "the toilers of the deep."

Sir Wilfrid was joined here by Hon. W. S. Fielding, the "father of reciprocity," as the crowd affectionately designated him. The Minister of Finance came over from Yarmouth, and joined his leader for the balance of his Maritime Province tour. He shared with the Prime Minister the honors of the demonstration. Sir Frederick Borden also joined the party last evening.

Sir Wilfrid, in opening his address, took occasion to extend words of welcome to a number of United States visitors present, Digby being a popular summer resort. "The great mistake of American statesmen in the past," he observed, "has been that they have for years regarded Canada as a negligible quantity. But Canada has come to the front. She has attracted the attention of the world, and has won from her American neighbors the respect to which she is entitled as a neighbor."

The Premier dealt with the reciprocity issue in detail. Explaining the character of the obstruction in Parliament, Sir Wilfrid told the gathering how as leader of the House he was required day after day to hear it all. "Ah, my fellow-countrymen, don't you think since that I deserve something at your hands?" he asked, amid laughter. He looked forward with confidence to the hour of polling. From every part of the country came news of victory, he said. The Premier concluded with a glowing tribute to Mr. Fielding and his services to Canada.

Cheers For Veteran.

Toronto, Aug. 30.—Sir Richard Cartwright was given the reception of his life when he came to Toronto last night to speak in support of a step in the direction of what he has advocated all his life—freer trade conditions.

Getting at once into the question before the people, Sir Richard said he doubted if any project had ever been submitted which would benefit so surely and so quickly the majority of the people as the proposal with which he would deal. He thought that this policy might well have been received with more universal approval. On the contrary, he had never known any project to be met with more calumny and more misrepresentation. He had discussed the question of reciprocity with men of light and leading in England and the United States, and he had not met one who did not express the belief that reciprocity in natural products would be to the advantage of Canada.

The arguments against reciprocity he classified as puerile and purely selfish. It was absurd to make it a question of loyalty or disloyalty whether the farmers of Canada are to sell their produce in the United States.

Re-open Comfort Case.

Beamsville, Ont., Aug. 30.—The Comfort case, in which the coroner's jury found that the mother and her child, whose bodies were found some weeks ago in the reservoir, had both been murdered, will likely be re-opened. The authorities have discovered a man who is prepared to swear that a few weeks before the woman's death he enquired of a man with whom he was working as Edna Comfort passed them who she was. He says the man replied, "That is Edna Comfort, and I wish to God she was in the bottom of the reservoir."

Captured Burglar.

Brockville, Aug. 30.—A series of burglaries in Brockville lately have been traced by the police to John Healey and W. Burns, two local characters. The capture of Healey has been effected, and he makes a clean breast of his wrong-doing. Most of the booty was secured from parties to whom it was sold for whisky. Burns is still at large.

Perished In Burning House.

Quebec, Aug. 30.—P. C. Dauteuil, a well-known broker of this city, lost his life by asphyxiation in a fire which badly damaged his residence, situated in St. Roche's, at an early hour yesterday morning. His wife and daughter escaped by jumping, but are seriously injured. Two sons escaped through the rear of the house into the yard.

Farmer Badly Hurt.

Brampton, Ont., Aug. 30.—Angus McLeod, a farmer living a few miles north of Brampton, had both legs broken in a runaway accident on Monday.

Some of his neighbor's children ran alongside his wagon and he was playfully reaching out at them with the lines, when his horses, a young team, bolted.

Empress of Britain Sails.

Montreal, Aug. 30.—A cable received at the local office of the Canadian Pacific Railroad steamship lines states that the Empress of Britain finally sailed from Liverpool at 5.40 p.m. yesterday.

An Expensive Delusion.

Montreal, Aug. 30.—As an evidence of their intention to take no chances of losing their votes at the coming elections, hundreds of citizens are running to the City Hall these days and paying all their arrears of taxes, under the mistaken impression that to be indebted to the city at the time of the polling is to render one disqualified to the franchise, as is the case in municipal elections.

Monday $47,000 was paid into the city treasury for water taxes alone.

Woman Takes Poison.

Toronto, Aug. 30.—Mary Crawford, 172 McCaul street, tried to end her life yesterday by taking carbolic acid, and tried to hide her actions by taking a good percentage of whisky along with the poison. She dropped into unconsciousness at the corner of Queen and Sherbourne streets at noon, and was taken from there to St. Michael's Hospital, where she regained consciousness about 8 o'clock in the evening.

Girl Swims Golden Gate.

San Francisco, Aug. 30.—Miss Hazel Laugenour, 19 years old, a graduate of the University of California, is the first woman to swim across the Golden Gate. She made the distance, one mile and a quarter, in 1 hour and 28 minutes on Monday. She had a hard time in the last 400 yards, as the tide began to set against her and her head often went under the breakers.

WILKIE IS ACCUSED

Coroner's Jury Blames Him for the Death of Wife, Believing that the Beating She Received Hastened Demise

PERRY EXONERATED

Toronto, Aug. 30.—"We find that Ellen Wilkie came to her death on Aug. 14, 1911, at 254 Claremont street, from the effect of injuries received from the hands of her husband, Edward Wilkie. We exonerate Frank Perry from any implication in her death."

This was the verdict of the jury at the inquest held at the morgue yesterday afternoon by Coroner Graham, regarding the death of Mrs. Ellen Wilkie.

Martin McManus, 2 Frelort place, testified that on Aug. 14, about 11 p.m., he saw Wilkie and wife struggling on the door step. Mrs. Wilkie was dragged into the house by the hair. He heard a woman screaming, and soon after a little girl came out of the house crying that her mother was being killed by her father. Two policemen then appeared on the scene, and the witness ran for a doctor. On returning he entered the house and found the woman lying on the floor and Wilkie beside her crying, "Oh, Nellie, Nellie!"

P. C. Kennedy, No. 316, testified that Wilkie had come to him about 6.30 p.m. and complained that his sister-in-law, Mrs. Crawford, was bringing in whisky to his wife. He at once went to the Wilkie home and found Mrs. Wilkie very excited. Wife and husband quarrelled in his presence, but no blows were struck. An empty whisky bottle lay on the table.

P. C. Charles W. Johnson was notified of the disturbance at the Wilkie home about 10 p.m. Arriving there he found Wilkie and wife scuffling. Mrs. Wilkie asked him not to leave because her husband had been abusing her all night. After having quieted matters, he left about 11.10.

P. C. Joseph McElroy arrived at the Wilkie home about 11.30. Mrs. Wilkie had blood on her face and was bleeding at the nose, and complained that Wilkie had abused her, repeatedly exclaiming, "He beat me and choked me." She announced her intention of laying a charge against her husband, but soon after collapsed and died. Mrs. Mary Moore, 8 Frelort place, merely further verified the evidence of the constables.

Dr. S. Singer, 194 Simcoe street, who, with Dr. Silverthorn, performed the post-mortem, testified that Mrs. Wilkie had suffered from heart disease. He believed the treatment that she had received on the night of her death would and did hasten her death.

Frank Perry, a neighbor of the Wilkies, testified that Wilkie's stepdaughter had called him in to separate the struggle in which her father and mother were engaged. He testified that he merely acted as peacemaker, and did not, as alleged, strike Mrs. Wilkie.

Labor Pickets Fined.

Montreal, Aug 30.—Judgment was given by Magistrate McMahon in the Westmount police court yesterday regarding the five carpenters who were arrested three weeks ago in Westmount, on a charge of loitering and intimidation, when acting as pickets during the carpenters' strike.

Magistrate McMahon found the men guilty and sentenced them to pay between them a fine of $10, this amount to cover costs. Mr. Archambault gave notice of appeal on behalf of the carpenters.

Agricultural Machinery In Russia.

St. Petersburg, Aug. 30.—The Minister of Commerce has submitted to the Cabinet the draft of a bill which will be introduced in the Duma providing measures to foster the manufacture of agricultural machinery in Russia. It is proposed to permit duty free the entry of certain machines and machine parts and to offer manufacturers credit on easy terms and reduce taxes in their favor.

WHITNEY WELL RECEIVED.

The Premier of Ontario Holds Meeting In Georgetown.

Georgetown, Aug. 30.—Sir James Whitney was greeted here last night by a gathering of over 2,000 people. On his arrival a monster procession was former, headed by the 20th Regiment band, and marched to the Drill Shed, which was filled to overflowing.

Mr. J. A. Willoughby was chairman, and Dr. A. W. Nixon, M.P.P., and D. Henderson, the Conservative candidate for Halton, were among those on the platform.

Sir James Whitney was greeted with loud cheering as he rose to address the assembly. It was his second visit to Georgetown, and he was pleased, he said, to be in a county that produced such men as Mr. Henderson, Dr. Nixon and J. R. Barber. He was here to do his duty, and he proceeded to strongly criticise the reciprocity treaty, which the Laurier Government, he contended, proposed forcing on the people of Canada.

Canada was prosperous now, and he did not believe Canadians would hand over their prosperity to the United States. In closing he asked the electors to support Mr. Henderson by voting in their own interests and defeating a treaty which would mean ruin to the markets of the farmer. The Premier was loudly cheered. Little Miss Elliott presented him with a bouquet.

Suspicious Circumstances.

St. Catharines, Aug. 30.—No light is thrown on the mysterious circumstances surrounding the death of Geo. Hodgins on at Merriton last Friday, at the inquest which was resumed last evening before Coroner Joy. Medical testimony showed that death was due to drowning, and that the wounds found on the head and shoulder had been received before death and probably after the body entered the water, which was probably at the bridge near McLean's sawmill. Although deceased drew $31.95 the day before the drowning, no one had seen him spend much money the last night he was seen. The suspicious circumstances regarding the pockets being turned inside out remain unsolved. One witness, Charles Dodd, stated that when returning home at 1 o'clock he saw two strangers lying asleep near the town line crossing not far from the spot where the deceased was last seen by his brother.

The inquest was adjourned until Sept. 12 to give the police a chance to solve the problem regarding the pockets and wounds.

Lightning Struck Funeral.

Canonsburg, Pa., Aug. 30.—As the casket containing the body of Stephen Mastiowica, ticket seller in the ill-fated moving picture show, was being borne to the grave in the cemetery here lightning struck a tree under which the procession was passing, and the six pall-bearers were knocked down. John Hodie, a brother-in-law of the deceased, was rendered unconscious, and the mourners were panic-stricken. The casket dropped into the mud where it lay until the party had recovered from the shock. Hodie was not seriously injured, but it was necessary to remove him from the cemetery in a carriage.

Montreal, Aug. 30.—Nine Pratico, the man who, owing to a mistake of the police, was sent to an insane asylum, has entered an action against the city for $5,000. Pratico and another man named Festoria had been locked in a cell of the central police station on the same evening, and after examining them Dr. Pigotte recommended that one of the men be sent before the recorder and the other sent to the asylum for the insane. It happened that the insane man was sent before the recorder and the sane one to the asylum. Hence the action of Pratico.

Abolish Conciliation Board.

London, Aug. 30.—The Royal Commission which is investigating the recent railway strike held its second session yesterday.

Fox, secretary of the Society of Locomotive Engineers, gave evidence as to the failure of conciliation boards to achieve the purpose for which they were authorized. He suggested that they be abolished, and that hereafter, when disputes arise, complaints be first submitted to the local officers of the company where the trouble occurred. Then, if the matter is not settled, it should be brought to a general meeting of men of the grade concerned, to elect a deputation to meet the management of the company, together with the trade union officers.

THE EVENING CHIT-CHAT

By Ruth Cameron

"Thinking of beautiful things we know
Dreaming of things that we mean to do
All complete in a minute or two;
Something noble and grand and good Won by merely wishing we could."

—Kipling.

Are you one of those people who are forever saying, "I wish I had this or that," "I wish someone would die and leave me ten thousand dollars," "I wish, etc., etc."?

If you are, did you ever realize that there is such a thing as the immorality of wishing?

Probably not.

But isn't there?

I think there is.

Indeed, I think wanting to have things without paying for them in coin of honest labour or sacrifice or desert or some similar specie is one of the greatest immoralities in the world.

It is this attitude which stands behind half the sins and follies in the calendar.

The thief, the seducer, the gambler and a thousand others are products of the desire to have without paying.

Then, too, over much wishing is enervating.

It has somewhat the same effect upon the character that riding all the time and never using one's legs as God meant them to be used would have upon the body muscles.

Of course, there is more than one kind of wishing.

There is the light hearted, nonchalant wish that says cheerfully, "It would be fun to have one of those touring cars to go rushing around the country in," or "Wouldn't it be great to live in a big house like that?"

And there is the discontented, unhappy wish that says enviously, "Oh, dear, I wish I had that automobile," "I wish I had his money," "Why can't I have a chance like that?"

The first kind of wishing is useless, but harmless if not indulged in too much. The second is both useless and harmful.

Wishing is only allowable when it grows strong enough to become a motive for an honest attempt at acquirement.

Wishing is like steam, useless and sometimes dangerous when allowed to escape, but capable of accomplishing great things when harnessed.

Teach your children—and incidently yourself if you need it—not to say or think "I wish" too much.

Teach them, in more concrete terms of course, that labour and contentment are the two handmaidens of happiness and that neither likes the company of "I wish."

A Deception

It Was Long Maintained and Ended Only in Death

By HELOISE BRAYTON

Copyright by American Press Association, 1911.

When Sam Bartlet at sixteen went away from home without bidding his parents or his little sister Ethel goodby (not communicating with them afterwards), he wrecked the comfort of the family. His mother died within a few years, and her death left the old man desolate indeed. His eyesight and his hearing were both impaired. His daughter Ethel, poor girl, had a hard time with him. To read to him was difficult, since she was obliged to shout, and he could not see to read himself.

Ethel loved her father, but it was natural that she should wish for something more inspiring than taking care of a broken down old man. She was but eleven years old when her brother went away and fourteen when her mother died. When at times she would have a temporary respite from the care of her father, like many another girl, she would dream of the prince who would come to marry her and give her the comforts of a home that would be her own—and his.

One morning there was a knock at the door. Ethel was upstairs and did not hear the summons. It sounded again and this time loud enough for Mr. Bartlet to hear. He went to the door and opened it. There stood a young man.

"I am looking for the home of Mr. Bartlet," said the stranger. "Have I struck the right house?"

"Speak louder," replied Bartlet, putting his hand to his ear; "I'm hard of hearing."

"I'm trying to find a Mr. Bartlet, and I think you are he. I judge by the resemblance your son"—

"My son?"

"Yes, your son Sam."

"Sam?"

"Yes."

"Oh, Sam, my boy, how could you have left us as you did with never a word all these long years? You killed your poor mother, and I have one foot in the grave. How could you? How could you?"

The father put his arms around the stranger's neck and wept.

The visitor was standing in this absurd position, not knowing whether to mingle his tears with those of the weeping father or to laugh when he saw an attractive looking girl descending the staircase.

"But I'll not reproach you, Sam," continued Mr. Bartlet. "I dare say I was severe with you, and a spirited boy won't stand too much correction. I'm glad you've come back and to stay—haven't you? Oh, stay with us! Ethel and I are so lonely, and we need your help. Your old father needs a strong young arm and brain to support him."

By these words and the half amused, half sympathetic look on the face of the stranger Ethel understood that her father had made a mistake. Dreading to have him suddenly disabused, fearing a reaction consequent upon disappointment, she gave the young man a meaning look and put a finger on her lips as a signal for silence. Her father's back was to her, so he did not see her, and she, wishing to release the visitor from his embarrassing position, laid her hand softly on the old man's shoulder. He turned and saw her.

"Oh, Ethel," he exclaimed joyfully, "whom do you suppose this is? Your long lost brother Sam has returned."

He disengaged himself from his supposed son that Ethel might embrace the prodigal. But Ethel stood mute.

"Forgive him, Ethel, as I have forgiven him. Forget the past and what he might have been to us during the years that are gone. It was I who drove him away by my harshness. Forgive him for my sake."

"I forgive him, father," said Ethel.

But there was no warmth in the words, nor did Ethel greet her brother with a sisterly kiss. An expression of infinite pain crossed the father's face. The stranger saw it and stepped in the breach.

"Forgive me, Ethel," he said. "I have done very wrong."

He advanced to her with outstretched arms. Ethel drew back.

"Ethel!" cried her father in an agony.

The stranger folded her in his arms and kissed her. Had the old man better eyesight he would have known by the blushes that the kiss was not a brotherly and sisterly one. And had not the two whose sight was perfect strongly approved of each other's personal appearance, had not each seen in the other's expression that approval, besides something akin to love's first spark, probably the girl might not have blushed. The old man put one arm around his supposed son and the other around his daughter forcing them to prolong their embrace.

"Thank heaven, my dear children, for this reunion!"

"Father," said Ethel, "let us hear what Sam has to say in explanation, or, rather, I had better hear it first and repeat it to you. You know you have grown very deaf since he went away, and he would have trouble making you hear."

"No," protested the old man. "I'm not so deaf that I can't hear people who speak plain. Sam would have to raise his voice at all if he doesn't mumble his words."

But the supposed Sam objected. He said that it was a long story he had to tell and he was tired. He would tell it to Ethel and she could repeat as much of it as she liked to their father. The old man, opposed by both his children, was obliged to give in and left them together. As soon as he had gone Ethel closed the door and looked inquiringly at the stranger.

"I was trying to begin," he said, "the delivery of a message from your late brother. He was my partner in business in a western city, and I regret to say that I come to announce his death."

Ethel sighed. It was rather that a hoped for support would not materialize than grief, for she scarcely remembered her brother. But the stranger, who gave his name as George Mason, assured her that her brother's interest in the business would be sufficient to make her father and herself quite comfortable. The story of Sam Bartlet's career was, as Mason had said, a long one, and after giving it to her the question came up as to what course to pursue in the matter of breaking the news of Sam's death to the father.

Ethel could not make up her mind to tell the old man that his son, instead of having returned to him, was dead. At any rate, she felt that it must be put off. But she invited Mr Mason to remain in the house—indeed, her father would misunderstand her not doing so—until he returned to the west. The old man was informed that Sam was in business in the west and must return there, but possibly he might take his father and sister with him. George Mason before leaving his business had taken in one of his clerks as a partner, and there was no hurry for his return. He remained with the Bartlets as a prodigal son, Ethel taking care to inform her friends and acquaintances as to the true state of the case.

Several weeks passed, and Mason made no move to return to business. Ethel was beginning to fear that some stupid person might let the cat out of the bag to her father. Besides this, playing brother and sister by two persons who were not related was not likely to go on without criticism. To guard against any such issue George Mason told Ethel that they had better announce that they were engaged, which was his way of proposing. Ethel didn't quite like that way of doing it, but she acquiesced.

Every day it became more risky to disabuse the old man and confess the deception. He was failing rapidly, and it was feared that the shock of knowing that his son had not returned to him, but was dead, would kill him. Mason and Ethel, who were very much in love with each other, wished to be married, and it was necessary that Mason should return to his business. It would not do to leave the old man behind, and if they took him with them, blind as he was, they could not live together as man and wife without his knowledge of their relationship. The puzzle seemed insoluble.

However, though Mr. Bartlet would not solve it by dying, he grew so blind that the young couple decided to be married and take him west with them without letting him know the secret. The ceremony was performed privately, where he would know nothing about it, and the three departed the same day for their new home.

Months passed, and although Mr. Bartlet's ears and eyes got no better his health was no worse. The difficulty of keeping the situation from him was trifling compared with the absurdity of his talking about the relationship that he supposed to exist between his two children.

"When Sam first came home," he said to a friend, "I feared Ethel would not forgive him for all the trouble he had given us, but now she acts toward him just like a bride and he like a young husband. They kiss when he goes down to business in the morning and when he comes home in the evening. I never saw such a loving brother and sister."

While the old man was content to live, as he supposed, with his children, he often wished that one or the other would marry that he might have a little grandson to love him and cheer him in his old age. But to gain this he must give up a part of what he already enjoyed. An outsider must be introduced into the house, and this he knew would endanger the family peace and comfort. The thought of bringing in another woman appalled him, for he had a theory that no woman could come into a house without sooner or later taking over its management. But he saw no difficulty in introducing an other man. So he occasionally hinted to his daughter that she should marry.

"I have no wish to marry, father," she would say. "I am perfectly contented as I am. Why do you wish me to marry?"

"Well, you see, I'm lonely during the long days when Sam is at business, and I'd like to have a child for company."

Finally about a year after the marriage the old man gave out. One day he took to his bed, which he never again left. His supposed son's absence all day at his business was a great trial to the invalid. From the time Mason went away in the morning till his return in the evening the patient would wait and watch for him.

At last when the candle of life was flickering low the dying man heard a child's cry.

"What's that?" he asked, starting up.

"Father," said Ethel, "that's little Sam, named for you, the third of the line."

Fortunately there was no time for any more lies. The grandfather dropped back dead.

A SPEAKING DOG

"Don" Renounces Words and Attaches a Meaning to Them

German scientific circles are being immensely puzzled by a celebrity in the animal kingdom, a prodigy partaking, it would seem, of the nature of both man and animals, the "speaking" dog Don.

At the age of six months, very much earlier than a human baby, he for the first time, showed his extraordinary gift by pronouncing the first articulate word. He was standing near the table, looking with begging eyes at his master, and when the latter happened to ask him—"would you like to have something?" he clearly replied, "Haben" ("have"). After this startling performance, he obviously became the object of unusual interest. It may be remarked, in passing, that the word "haben" is one of the first acquired by German infants, thanks to the instinct of imitation innate in man. All the dog-wonder learned in afterlife he did under the same impulse of the same instinct, training being only resorted to from time to time. This is why the dog produces that wonderful impression of a strong individuality, doing everything out of his own free will, and, it seems, without any outside compulsion.

His ways and manners, by-the-bye, have always been remarkably independent. In his master's house at Theerhutte, in the midst of the royal hunting grounds, he would lead a life of nearly absolute liberty, apart from his professional duties as setter-hound. Every day he would set out for a solitary morning walk, strolling through the heath and woods, and paying an occasional call to one or other of his master's friends. After opening the door himself, drawing back the latch in strictly human fashion, he would walk in, lie down comfortably at the fire-side, and, if in good spirits, would have a little talk with the inmates of the house.

School children met on the road he would accost, requesting a share in their breakfast by the words "hunger" or "kuchen haben" ("have cake"). It is told of him that on once meeting an old woman from the neighboring village on her way to the market, he ulefly stepped towards her, distinctly pronouncing the words—"Don hunger, kuchen haben." The poor woman was so frightened that she took to a speedy flight, leaving her basket behind her, in the firm belief that the dog was possessed of the evil one.

The most wonderful thing about him is his talking with strangers quite as freely as with his own master. When, therefore, Dr. Pfungst, the well-known expert in the psychology of animals, and Dr. Vosseler, Director of the Hamburg Zoological Gardens, wished to submit Don to scientific tests, they had no difficulty whatever in making him pronounce every word of his repertoire. The phonographic records made on this occasion prove beyond doubt the identity of Don's speech with that of human beings. There are, it is true, some slight differences in pronunciation due to differences in the structure of the larynx, but these in no way detract from the distinctness of the words. A strange impression is produced by comparison between phonographic records of human and canine speech; as, in fact, the dog speaks so very much louder than man, the two voices seem to have exchanged their respective roles.

Don is an absolute prodigy, and the first case on record of a dog not only pronouncing some words, but even attaching a meaning to them and making a frequent use of his powers in satisfying his daily wants and showing his attachment to persons of his surroundings. He is more or less talkative according to circumstances. If in low spirits, as after a punishment, he absolutely refuses to speak, and the same effect is produced by bodily indisposition. In bad weather he is less inclined to speak than in good weather. Moreover, it is readily seen that speaking involves a considerable fatigue to the dog, who after some repeated exercises always is tired to some extent. Though the formation of vowels and consonants does not always occur according to the same principles as in the human organ of speech, his pronunciation is quite clear, and frequently of an absolutely human distinctness.

Don is a beautiful brown hound of strong build, and remarkably intelligent eyes. In fact, there is something almost human in his expression.—Glasgow Herald.

COST OF TUBERCULOSIS

E. F. McSweeney's Estimate is $100 Per Family a Year

"Preventable disease, the greatest item in which is tuberculosis and the other expenses which grow out of it, costs each family on this continent at the minimum $100 a year." This is a verdict of a most thorough and cautious estimate by expert statisticians, and it errs, if anything, on the conservative side. It is a sentence, the nugget of the discourse, taken from an address on "Tuberculosis as a factor in the increased cost of living," delivered at Denver by Mr. Edward F. McSweeney, chairman of the board of trustees of the Boston Consumptives' Hospital. The guess that preventable disease has been a large share of the growing weight of living expenses is not a new one, but the thoroughness with which the proofs have been searched out by Mr. McSweeney is novel and convincing. The nations have searched and found five major causes of this increase, namely, waste, extravagance, armed peace, inefficiency and the burden of crime, pauperism, accident and disease. By the most cautious estimate the yearly money cost of tuberculosis alone in the United States is $622,513,904, and on the present ratio of deaths annually from this disease, as compared with the deaths from all other causes, 10,000,000 of people now living will eventually die of tuberculosis. The constructive part of Mr. McSweeney's discourse deals with the proof that the treatment of incipient cases is a failure, because returning to bad conditions, they relapse; and that the prevention of contagion from the advanced cases is where the resistance must be focussed. New York is following this lead, and it has now been recognised by Germany. The rigid medical inspection of school-children is one means of prevention and "we will solve the tuberculosis question when we settle the problems of child labor, city congestion, long hours and bad factory and housing conditions." This critic is emphatic that the crusade is not one primarily for physicians and charity workers: "This is essentially a business man's crusade, and should be led by the Chamber of Commerce."

THE LEAP OF DEATH

Young Railway Man Was Carried Down a Swiss Torrent

Four employees of the Swiss railway were bathing in the Fredsalunga torrent, when a fireman, named Morgenthaler, was caught in a current and carried over a cascade, being hurled into space over the precipice called the Salto Morte, a leap of death, about 1,000 feet high. Ten years ago an Englishman met with a similar accident there.

A BOGUS BISHOP

A Cattle Dealer Claimed He Was the Bishop of Nazareth

Several monasteries and a nunnery in South Germany have been neatly swindled by two persons of ascetic appearance describing themselves as the Syro-Chaldaic Bishop of Nazareth and his chaplain. The sham Bishop received numerous offerings for masses and for good work in his diocese. He permitted himself, despite his asceticism, to be very hospitably entertained. At the Convent in Mendelheim he found the cooking particularly good and remained eight days. At length, while he was staying at the Beuren Monastery, favored by the Kaiser, the bogus Bishop aroused suspicions. The police were called in, and soon established his identity as a cattle-dealer who became a deacon, and, on being discharged, a commercial traveller.

POETS' PENS GUIDED BY SPIRIT HANDS

SUPERNATURAL Story, Told for the First Time, of the Inspiration That Resulted in James Whitcomb Riley's "Flying Islands of the Night."

FREDERICK AYER

(Copyright, 1911, by the New York Herald Co. All rights reserved.)

RECENTLY there was published a collection of poems, "Bell and Wing," for which the author, Mr. Frederick B. Ayer, claimed spirit inspiration and actual aid in composition. Variously humored reviews have been printed about both the book and the author. His statement being accepted as sincerely made, the question has arisen, if he did not imagine this spiritual assistance and he did receive these, what was it?

This case and question are by no means the first of their kind to attract public attention. Many such may be quoted. Probably the most prominent precedent, however, is that of one of the best beloved poets of the century, the real story of some of whose publications is herewith printed for the first time. He and several of his artistic friends received, it is asserted, more than inspired aid from behind the veil. The question—what, was it?—assumes indeed a deep significance in their cases.

FOR many years in the capital city of Indiana there was a quiet little circle of artists and writers among whom existed an unusual bond of interest. They were all questioners; singly and in groups they sought for the answer to the ultimate. None was or has become radical in the support of his belief in the hereafter, but some, they say, have derived solace and consolation in their faith, and some real inspiration from other than earthly sources.

Men and women of culture and intellectuality, they paid scant attention to the usual order of public spiritualistic meetings, lecturers on the occult, alleged theosophical leaders and the like. For the most part they studied and experimented and accepted beliefs for themselves; and they never advertised this activity. What they came to know, or thought they knew, they kept to themselves and indulged in their lives and work.

This investment gave rich returns, if some of the hitherto unwritten chronicles of supernatural collaboration they enjoyed are to be credited. The story, then, of the recent compilation of verse will not seem so strange; for in several striking instances members of this Indiana circle have accomplished works much more remarkable—for instance, the manner in which James Whitcomb Riley's "Flying Islands of the Night" came to be written.

The elder Riley, who had been a more or less prosperous lawyer in the small town of Greenfield, Ind., probably had much to do with the poet's questioning attitude toward the future, he being an ardent believer in spiritualism. The father and son often discussed this question. On one particular occasion the father was able to decipher a letter which the son received from a Missouri medium who professed to be merely relaying a message given her by a spirit. To the Rileys' satisfaction it proved to be a communication from a relative long dead.

The poet has never talked of his belief outside of the small circle of friends who held a like one. That he has steadfastly refused to subscribe to any established religious creed or dogma is generally known, however, but there has been something too intensely natural about him to tempt any argument on this point from his ministerial acquaintance; even his critics, and they were exceeding few, have carped on other subjects.

A great deal of Riley's poetry has been inspirational, declare those who know him best. This, of course, is the popular conception of poetical production, however seldom the actuality. But it is an undoubted fact that his hours of silent meditation on things spiritual have been fruitful of some of his most beautiful ideas, even though these have been developed in the form of homely nature studies.

When "The Flying Islands of the Night," a fantastic drama in verse, appeared in the early nineties under his signature the book reviewers and the literary world in general figuratively took a long breath. It wasn't different from anything the poet had previously written, so seemingly out of his chosen province, such a striking departure from his dialect sermons in song. The critics took sides and wrangled; the readers spent days in going over the work and weeks in trying to understand it.

On the title page Riley had inscribed, "A thynge of wytchenecre—an Isle drome," and had prefaced the poem with a little verse, the burden of which was, "For the song's sake; even so; humor it and let it go all-untrammeled and wild of wing—leave it ever truantling." Then the poem had followed—a fanciful story of memory of a mystical island which floated at night somewhere above the earth, bringing in the end a triumph of virtue and goodness and a terrible punishment for evil. The thin thread of story was carried faithfully through pages of beautifully juggled word pictures, wonderful imagery and at times deliciously musical songs. The reader who took the author's advice to accept the song simply for the song's sake was able to revel in a surfeit of all very rhymes and lay the volume down satisfied. He who disregarded this word, however, spent many a sleepless night in trying to fathom the why of it all. The poet gave such no help. He had never made an explanation.

Story of Riley's Poem.

For the first time now comes forward one of his oldest and closest friends, an artist who for many years was a prominent member of the Indianapolis circle, and he tells the real story of the writing of the "Flying Islands of Night." His word is not to be doubted, however fanciful it may seem. Than he there is none more intimately acquainted with all of Riley's delving into the void. This is his testimony:—

"At this time I was living in a small place in the outskirts of the city and Riley was occupying rooms at the Dennison Hotel. He often divided his time between this house and his real home in the old Nickum mansion in Lockerbie street. I had not seen him for several days before the evening on which happened what I am about to relate.

"As was my custom after supper, I was sitting with my wife in one of our rooms, resting and meditating. For some time I sat thus—we never conversed during these periods—when I began to feel extremely drowsy. Then I slept, or I went into a trance, and I dreamed or saw a vision.

"I seemed to arise from my chair and leave the house. Thence I made my way by well known streets through the city to the Dennison Hotel. When I reached there I went without any preliminaries to the suite Riley always occupied and knocked upon the door. His voice bade me enter.

"He was sitting at a table on which were scattered many sheets of note paper. He was busily writing. Without looking up he said, 'I am glad to see you, G——. Sit down, if you think you can stand to see and hear what you will.' I took a chair facing him.

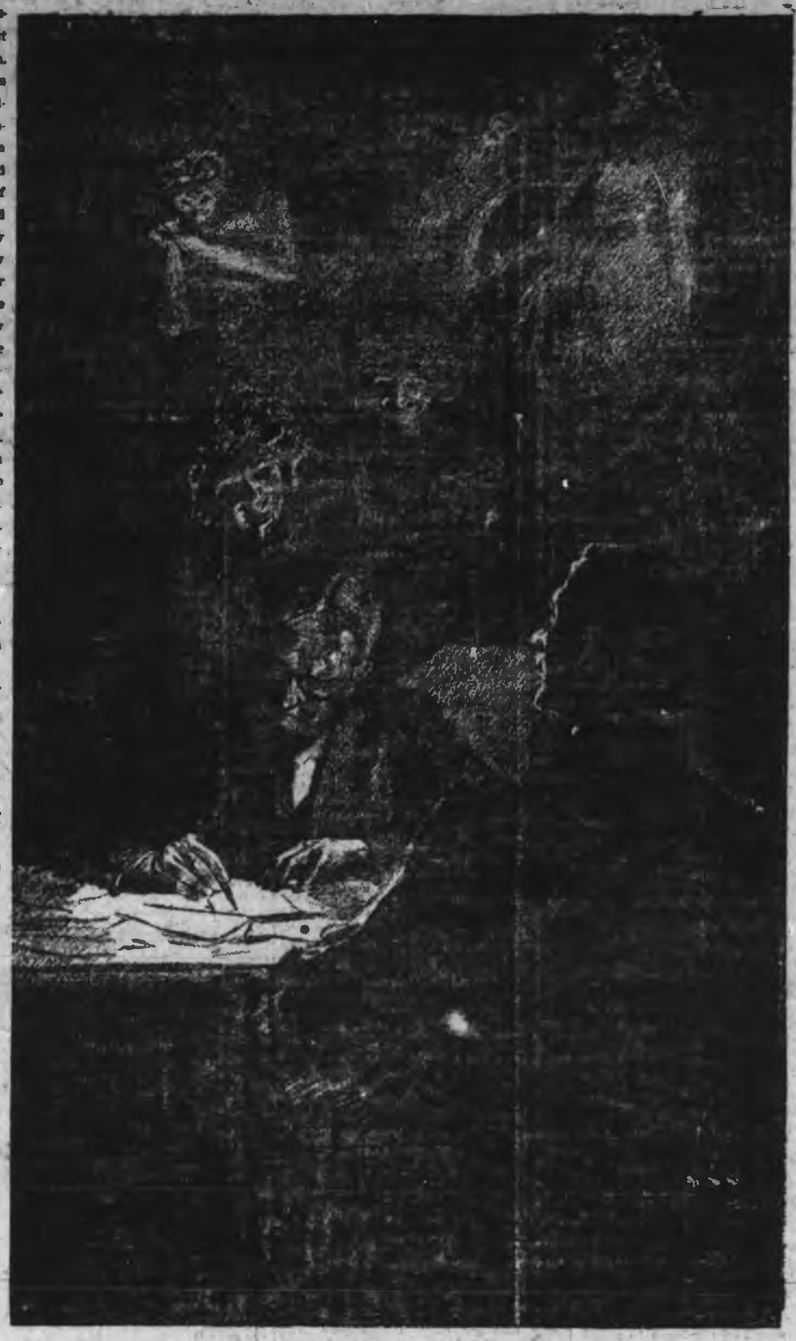
"Almost at once I began to hear faint music, strange, but wonderfully sweet chords, which grew louder and louder and filled the room with harmony. Then, there seemed to come from out the air fair faces, which smiled, and then dancing figures, flouting singly and in groups about the head of the poet in time to the strange melodies, the voices of these ethereal beings now and then joining in song. The air in the room became heavy with the perfume of flowers. My senses began to reel in an ecstasy I cannot name. Finally and with difficulty I arose, reached the door and stumbled my way home.

"My wife and I discussed my strange experience at length, but we could arrive at no satisfactory explanation. I tried to dismiss the vision from my mind the next day, but was unable to do so. For at least a week what I had seen in that room, or in my vision of that room at the Dennison Hotel haunted me. Then one morning I met Riley on the street.

"He looked worn, as if he had been working hard and had lost a lot of sleep. He even greeted me languidly, but he soon lost this attitude. I asked him what he had been doing. Working, he said. At the Dennison? Yes, in the suite at the hotel.

"Then I related my strange experience of the evening when I had had the vision, had heard the wonderful music and smelled the intoxicating flower odors. As I talked he became palpably excited and I had hardly finished when he exclaimed:—

"'It wasn't a dream, G——. It was true, every bit of it. Just at the hour you mention I was doing just as you saw me—impelled to write, to transcribe what I saw and heard all about me. And that was what you, too, saw and heard.



"Then There Seemed to Come from Out the Air Fair Faces, Which Smiled."

"'But I saw more and heard more. I have been at work ever since. I have finished now what I shall call 'The Flying Islands of the Night.' But I must tone it down before it is published. I shall have to change it greatly. The world would think that I have lost my senses if I were to publish it just as I got it. I could never explain to the world that it was given to me by greater powers than we know. Nor, for the same reason, may I attempt to explain its message. You will know, though. You saw and heard. It is wonderful, G——; wonderful.'

"Ultimately, of course, the book was brought out. Its reception was unusual. Some accepted without question the song, that is—others theorized and theorized. This is the first time that the inspiration, the manner of composition and the reason for 'The Flying Islands of the Night' have ever been told."

A comparison of parts of the poet's drama with this explanation, the artist's description of what he saw in the hotel room and the poet's known spiritualistic beliefs are very interesting. For instance, the description of scene 1, act I, which is laid in 'Spirtland,' in the Flying Islands. It reads:—

"Time, Moondown. Interior of court of Krung. A vast, pendant star burns dimly in the dome above the throne. Crastillomoom (the Queen) discovered languidly reclining at foot of empty throne, an overturned goblet lying near, as if just drained. The Queen, in seeming dazed, ecstatic state, raptly gazing upward and listening. Swarming forms and faces, in air above, seen eerily coming and going, blending and intermingling in domed ceiling spaces of the court. Weird music. Mystic, luminous, beautiful faces detached from swarm, float, singly, forward, tremulously and in succession, poising in mid air and chanting."

These passages are now illuminated:—

"We talked
Of all the past, ah me! and all the friends
That now await my coming. * * *
* * * I but blend them all
With dreams of when,
With thy warm hand clasped close in this of mine.
We cross the floating bridge that soon again
Will span the all-unfathomable gulfs
Of nether air betwixt this isle of strife
And my most glorious realm of changeless peace."

"We stint not our investigations to
Our worlds only, but query still beyond—
For now our goolores say, below these isles
A million million miles are other worlds.
And I myself have heard, at dawn of moon,
A liquid music filtered through my dreams,
As though 'twere myriad of sweet voices"—

"Thou art not all of earth,
O angel one!
Nor do I far miswonder me and thou
Hast peered above the very walls of heaven!"

Was It a Dream?

And more, many more of fulsome, veiled, beautiful imagery. It is such which have caused the serious reader sleepless nights and long have left him in doubt. To accept the artist's word means their solution now. But was his vision merely singularly coincident with that of the poet? Did they merely dream the same fantastic dream? Or was the gentle Riley the subject of a real spiritual visitation? What was it?

Due to a direction, or, better, an intuition, not of mundane origin, a second member of this Indianapolis circle brought about the first literary success of an Indiana writer, who is known in many quarters as well as the Hoosier poet.

Mrs. Ovid Butler Jameson, the sister of Booth Tarkington, whose novels and plays have placed him in the front rank of American authors, has long been a delver in the occult and that phase of existence which comes after death. She made a deep study of theosophy for years and among the writers and artists in the Indiana capital who were interested in spiritualism has always held a prominent place.

The "Gentleman From Indiana," Tarkington's first success, had been in manuscript form for some time, but the author had either failed to place it or thought so little of it that he had not the heart to make the attempt. It was following a direction she had received as a mental suggestion from some source that Mrs. Jameson carried the novel to New York and placed it in the hands of a certain reader for a publishing house whom she had met.

After but a first reading the book was pronounced acceptable. When it was brought out it won immediate popularity. Almost over night, it seemed, Booth Tarkington emerged from obscurity and took a place as a successful writer of fiction. Was it mere chance that led the sister to this certain reader of this certain house? Or was it the advice of something behind the veil? What was it?

Mrs. Milburn, the wife of a prominent clergyman formerly located in Indianapolis and later even more prominently associated in work in Chicago, a very close friend of Mrs. Jameson, was a third of this circle to produce a work through spiritual assistance. Her story probably is the most remarkable of the three. According to the assertion, none other than Sapho, the ancient Greek poetess, gave her her material.

Mrs. Milburn prior to this time had long held an enviable place in the educational world as a Greek scholar. She had done much highly appreciated work in the way of translations of ancient Greek, and what she wrote and what she said on any theme appertaining to this long dead language was accepted as standard. When in 1903 she published "Lost Letters from Lesbos," a collection of translations purporting to be of hitherto undiscovered poems by Sapho, her reputation was enhanced.

None came forward with a critique. Unquestionably all the poems were in the known Sapho form. None fell below metrical standard; none lacked in beauty or philosophical tone. It was an acquisition to the literature of the world, this work.

Then it became known where the authoress had obtained these "undiscovered poems." For weeks she had regularly visited a Mrs. Lotta Herbine, the wife of a well known merchant, who seemed to possess unusual mediumistic powers. Sometimes she had gone alone; sometimes her very close friend had been with her. When conditions were propitious on these occasions Mrs. Herbine had gone into a trance and from some dim recess in the great beyond the spirit of the ancient Greek poetess had been called and had come and written messages and poems for her twentieth century translator.

These poems made up "Lost Letters from Lesbos." Even the slightest imputation of literary imposition dare not be made against Mrs. Milburn. She was far above anything of that sort. So the baffling question, Was it really Sapho? Then how and why? Or what was it?

The writer was party to an experiment with the the powers of this particular private medium following the publication of Mrs. Milburn's book and confidential information as to the manner in which it had been written. It was ascertained that Mrs. Herbine knew nothing of Greek and that her method of work while in a trance state had none of the charlatan features characteristic of other mediums. The experiment is given for what it is worth.

A double slate was prepared, with an ordinary slate pencil on the inside, wrapped with string and then sealed at a place far from the medium's home and in the presence of witnesses. Then, upon appointment, she was visited.

"I see you have a copy of Mrs. Milburn's book in your overcoat pocket," she remarked to the caller as he entered. True, but that might have been simple mind reading.

"I cannot promise you anything," she continued, leading the way into a side room, "but I shall do my best. Whom do you wish me to get for you? Ah, Sapho? Well, I can only try."

The medium sat on the opposite side of a small table, her fingers barely touching the edge of the prepared slate, which the visitor held. She closed her eyes and for several minutes remained in this state. Then she began to speak, in whispers almost, and at the same time the slate began to jerk and move about as if some unseen hand were trying to get it away from its possessor. There was no hand visible. The visitor could see under the table plainly at all times.

Soon Mrs. Herbine opened her eyes and, pleading fatigue, asked that the session be terminated. "Possibly you have something," she said. "I am not certain; but I hope you are satisfied."

Back again among his witnesses the investigator opened the slate, the seal of which had not been broken. Its insides were covered with writing, for the most part in some language with which none of those present was acquainted. The Greek professors of a local university was called for consultation. He studied the writing carefully for a long time. Finally, like a man who had discovered a treasure, he looked about him and announced:—

"This is the purest of ancient Greek. Where did you get it?"

How was this worked, if trick it was? Did the real spirit of Sapho write upon the slate? Who, was it?

WHAT AILED ALFRED.

UNDER teacher's chaperonage Alfred's little sisters had twice visited the dispensary, where, for the consideration of a quarter each time, they restrained their tears and permitted the doctors to thump their chests and look down their throats. Last Friday Alfred brought the message that mother wanted teacher to take him around to the dispensary after school.

"Why, Alfred," she said, "I didn't know you were ill. What is the matter?"

"I hurt," said Alfred.

"Where?"

"Here."

She unbuttoned his little jacket and shirt and examined the region about the heart. So far as she could make out Alfred was quite sound. Nevertheless, she took him to the dispensary. The doctors thumped and punched and applied all manner of instruments, but although Alfred stuck to it that he hurt they could not find out what hurt him. But when he started home the cause of his indisposition was artlessly revealed.

"I ain't ready to go yet," said Alfred. "Nobody give me a quarter."

AFTER BIG GAME MET HIS DEATH

A Cow Elephant Caught Longden on Her Tusks and Tossed Him Furiously

Full details of the death of M. Gerald Longden are given by the East African Standard, which is printed at Mombasa, and has just reached England. M. Longden was one of the most daring and experienced elephant hunters. He made a big game shooting expedition with his wife into the wilds of the Belgian Congo, and it was there that he perished. Mrs. Longden was not with him on the fatal day, but was in camp some distance away, when news reached her through natives that something terrible had happened to him. She instantly set out to his aid, accompanied only by natives, and reached him at the height of one of the fearful tropical storms common in the Congo. She found him lying in the bush in excruciating agony, without tent or covering. It was extremely difficult for her to ascertain what had occurred, as he had only natives with him. But their story was that he was firing at a bull elephant, when he was charged from behind by a cow elephant which he had not seen. The animal caught him on her tusks and tossed him furiously. The tusks pierced his back and passed right through his body. It was in this plight that he was found. Mrs. Longden, with heroic courage, rendered all the loving aid that was possible. Then followed a terrible forced march of twenty-four hours back to camp, the agonizing suspense of which was prolonged by the native bearers losing their way in the dark. Runners were sent on in advance to obtain medical assistance, but on the third day, before further help could reach him, M. Longden died, conscious to the end, and enduring his sufferings with unflinching fortitude. Mrs. Longden, grief-stricken and shaken in health, made her way to Nairobi, and is now returning to Europe.

LONDON COACHES

New Company to Take Tourists Over South of England Roads

When Alfred Vanderbilt some seasons ago began to run his new famous coaches between London and Brighton, he probably did not imagine that these trips revealed to a number of Londoners the wonderful beauty of the country between this city and the south coast of England, and that as a result coaching would reach a popularity which former generations, that merely used the stage coaches because there was no other way of travelling, had never dreamed of.

Still, this is really so. More coaches will soon be travelling along English roads than ever before for a company has been formed, which is even now building motor coaches, which within a week or two will be making daily trips between Piccadilly Circus, Dover, Brighton and other well-known seaside resorts. The coaches are to be a delight to the eye. They will be built on the lines of the old stage coaches, but it is intended that they shall be eminently utilitarian. It will be a part of the scheme of the company to place its facilities at the disposal of the post office for parcel-carrying purposes, and also to devote ten per cent. of its profits, in return for certain facilities, to the towns through which the coaches pass. The usefulness of the scheme has been amply proved in the case of the motor service linking up the seaside resorts of Thanet and Weymouth. It is stated, however, that the project may not end with the stage motor-coaches. The canals in course of time will be utilised to a much greater extent for passenger traffic, and there are signs that the motor-driven craft may soon be as familiar a sight on our great waterways as the motor omnibus is at present in the streets of London.

INHERITED A FORTUNE

An Elderly Bachelor was Indignant at Small Wages Paid a Girl

Fraulein Wardyas, a poor girl employed as a saleswoman in a boot and shoe shop in a small town in Hungary, has just inherited a fortune of $130,000 under extraordinary circumstances. Herr Cronsey, an elderly bachelor, was among the customers at the shop, and expressed indignation at the small wages paid to her. Recently he entered the shop to make some small purchases, and said that he intended to make Fraulein Wardyas heiress to all his property. She laughed, as she believed him to be badly off, his clothes being shabby. Saying, "I really mean it," he unfastened his cuff, and laying it flat on the counter, drew out a fountain pen and wrote a will. He called two apprentices to sign it, and having placed it in his pocket, left the shop. A few minutes later Herr Cronsey, in making a violent effort to avoid a motor-car in the roadway, overstrained his heart and fell dead. Next day Fraulein Wardyas was informed that his estate of $130,000 was at her disposal.

Cured Eczema and Dandruff

"I am pleased to inform you that I have been cured by Cuticura Soap and Ointment. Since I was a boy I have suffered with dandruff, not only from the itching but from its disagreeable appearance in a scaly form all over my head. I had to brush it off my clothes all day long. I used every kind of preparation supposed to cure dandruff, also soaps and shampoos, but it seemed to me that, instead of improving with these remedies, the dandruff increased, even my hair began to fall out and the result was that two months ago some developed on my scalp.

"I suffered so from this that as a last resource I thought I would try Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment. They had the most gratifying results for I had used only one box of Cuticura Ointment and a single cake of Cuticura Soap when I was cured, the eczema and dandruff were gone and my head perfectly clear.

"I can assure you that so long as I live no other soap than Cuticura will be used by me and all those near to me. I will also add that I will always use Cuticura Ointment as a dressing for the hair. I feel that you should know of my cure and if you desire you may use this as a true testimonial which comes from a sufferer of thirty years' standing. I will be happy to tell any one of my experience in order to assist those who may be suffering from the same disease." (Signed) J. ACEVEDO, General Commission Merchant, 59 Pearl St., New York.

Cuticura Soap and Ointment afford the speediest and most economical treatment for itching, burning, scaly humours of infants, children and adults. As in this case, a single set is often sufficient. Sold throughout the world. Send to Potter Drug & Chem. Corp., Boston, U.S.A., for 32-page Cuticura Book on treatment of skin and scalp affections.

BIG PIANO SMASH

The well-known Berlin pianoforte factory, Carl Hinze, has stopped payment. The liabilities are estimated at nearly $5,000,000. A recent failure, it now transpires, was connected with the present smash, and ten to fifteen more expected as the result. Franklin Grandt, owner of a pianoforte business, who had invested her entire fortune of $50,000 in Hinze's concern, has committed suicide. Hinze, who has been for some years in great financial difficulties, put himself in the hands of extortionate moneylenders, and this brought about the catastrophe.

NATURE BEATITUDES

A Plea for the Protection of Trees, Shrubs and Bushes

Blessed is the man who appreciates the value of trees, shrubs, and bush fruits; for his home shall become a place of shelter from the storm, with bowers of beauty, and fruit in due season.

Blessed is he who deplores the fact that he has not already made a beginning in growing trees, shrubs, and small fruits; for he shall yet find comfort for himself and his children if he goes to work now.

Blessed is he who, living on the bleak prairie, hungers for a beautiful sheltered dwelling place; for he shall have it if he goes about it aright.

Blessed is he who thinks of the welfare of his wife and children, who provides a shelter for both man and beast; for he shall obtain mercy.

Blessed is he who is pure in heart; for he shall see God in tree and shrub and flower—yea, verily, he shall become like the tree spoken of by the psalmist, bringing forth his fruit in his season, his leaf also shall not wither and whatsoever he doeth shall prosper.

Blessed is the man who is adversely criticised for well-doing; for he, if he perseveres, shall live to see others following where he leads; he shall live to see a treeless prairie become dotted with groves—oases of refuge and delight in a wind-swept plain.—C. Roscoe Brown, in Saskatoon Phoenix.

Despair and Despondency

No one but a woman can tell the story of the suffering, the despair, and the despondency endured by women who carry a daily burden of ill-health and pain because of disorders and derangements of the delicate and important organs that are distinctly feminine. The tortures so bravely endured completely upset the nerves if long continued.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is a positive cure for weakness and disease of the feminine organism.

IT MAKES WEAK WOMEN STRONG, SICK WOMEN WELL.

It allays inflammation, heals ulceration and soothes pain. It tones and builds up the nerves. It fits for wifehood and motherhood. Honest medicine dealers sell it, and have nothing to urge upon you as "just as good." It is non-secret, non-alcoholic and has a record of forty years of cures. ASK YOUR NEIGHBORS. They probably know of some of its many cures.

If you want a book that tells all about women's diseases, and how to cure them at home, send 31 one-cent stamps to Dr. Pierce to pay cost of mailing only, and he will send you a free copy of his great thousand-page illustrated Common Sense Medical Adviser—revised, up-to date edition, in paper covers. In handsome, cloth-binding, 50 stamps. Address Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N.Y.

POULTRY NOTES

Proper Buildings—Hints as to Feeding—Quality of Food

While substantially built and hygienically constructed sheds are very requisite for poultry, whether young stock or laying hens, says a writer in The Glasgow Herald, it is a mistake to go to the other extreme, as many are in the habit of doing, and provide elaborate and costly houses. It fowls are to prove profitable, the greatest economy is necessary in all branches of the work, and if a large capital is invested in appliances, it means that there is less likelihood of there being a balance upon the right side at the end of the financial year. Of course, there is such a thing as false economy, but the intelligent reader will, without difficulty, be able to distinguish between the two. I once saw a poultry-house in the United States that had cost over $10,000 to erect, although it possessed accommodation for only five hundred birds. A large portion of the wood consisted of mahogany, while some of the inside fittings were of solid brass. The owner was an extremely wealthy lady, who, apparently, was quite indifferent whether her fowls proved profitable or not, so that in this instance the waste of money (for it can be called by no other name) was a small matter. I have, however, on many occasions, seen houses that were far too costly, upon places, moreover, where it was of great importance to make the poultry pay. So long as the general principles are right, the simpler the house is the better, and it is infinitely preferable to spend the money upon really good stock birds than upon costly and elaborate appliances.

What Fattening Means

The term fattening is an unfortunate one, and is very liable to convey an entirely mistaken meaning. The thing to be guarded against most strenuously in preparing fowls for the table is the addition of fat to the carcase; rather is it the aim to add on flesh. A "fat" bird is always disagreeable as well as wasteful, whereas a "fattened" bird is pleasing, and though apparently a more expensive dish, is really more economical. The American word "finishing" and the French "ripening" are both much more suitable. The artificial feeding of poultry is no modern invention, because for upwards of 4,000 years have fowls been crammed. In the second book of Kings reference is made there to crammed fowls, while later we find that among the dishes for King Solomon's table there were included fatted chickens.

The Value of Geese

No kind of poultry benefit the land so much as do geese, and it is surprising how, in the space of a few years the herbage will be improved. For this very reason, however, geese should not be confined or kept upon very small areas, as they so quickly taint the ground, making it unsuitable for other stock. I have come across many cases in which the rearing and fattening of geese in close quarters has been tried, but I know of no one case in which this has been attended with success. Geese require an abundance of room in which to grow and develop well, and thus the industry is especially suitable for farmers. There are thousands upon thousands of acres in this country, yielding no profit whatever at the present time, that could be turned to excellent account for maintaining large flocks of geese without disturbing any other farm operations.

The Cause of Slow Growth

A comparatively common cause of slow growth and impaired vitality is that the brooder or chicken-house is overcrowded. It is quite impossible for chickens which are closely housed to remain strong and healthy, since the constant breathing of impure, vitiated air is bound to affect them injuriously. Many of the brooders that are offered for sale, and that are advertised as capable of accommodating a hundred chickens, cannot comfortably hold more than fifty or sixty. In fact, I have always found it a good plan to just halve the number of chickens that a brooder is advertised to hold. A hundred may be kept therein quite comfortably for the first week or ten days, but after this time they are seriously overcrowded. Plenty of exercise is an essential factor in successful rearing, and, apart from the fact that the air becomes foul in an overcrowded brooder, or house, there is insufficient space for the chickens to run about in comfort. Particularly must no overcrowding be allowed when the dry method of feeding is adopted.

Natural v. Artificial Food

There can be no two opinions among experienced poultry men as to which is the better kind of food, natural or artificial, as no only do the fowls thrive better upon the former, but the food bill is greatly reduced. Natural food may consist of grit, worms, insects, and seeds, with which, though hardly a food, lime may be included. All of these are extremely beneficial. It must be remembered, therefore, that natural foods should always be supplied in preference to artificial, however good the latter may be. This is one of the reasons why I have so constantly advocated the employment of portable houses.

CHEESE FOR THE CHURCH

A very curious cheese custom is said to survive in certain districts in Switzerland. In the early days of summer the inhabitants of the valley, with their flocks and herds, withdraw to the bracing mountain air of the Alps and many villages are left practically deserted in order that the people shall not be without spiritual guidance, the curé or pastor of each village faithfully follows his parishioners wherever they wander, performing the principal duties of his office. In order to show their appreciation for his efforts, the peasants reserve for him the milk yielded by their beasts during the last few days in the mountains, and, on the return of the parish to its village, this milk is presented to the Church, in procession and with due ceremony, in the form of cheeses, ranging in weight from eight to eighty pounds.

Liverpool and Chicago Wheat Futures Close Lower—Live Stock—Latest Quotations.

CHICAGO, Aug. 29.—Wheat was dull to-day, selling off 1 1-8c on liquidation of September. Corn, oats and provisions declined slightly.

Wheat started lower in sympathy with declines in the northwest, and showed anything but recuperative powers. September closed 1 1-4c down, at $1 3-8c, and December 1 1-4 to 1 1-4c, depressed at 94c to 94 1-8c. The cash situation was not encouraging to the bulls, only 50,000 bushels sold to-day.

The Liverpool market closed to-day unchanged to ½d lower than yesterday on wheat, and ¼d to ⅝d higher on corn. Antwerp closed 2½c higher on wheat, Budapest 1½c higher.

CRIPPLE FROM RHEUMATISM

NOW IN PERFECT HEALTH THANKS TO "FRUIT-A-TIVES"

VANCOUVER, B.C., Feb. 1st, 1910.

"I am well acquainted with a man, known to thousands in Vancouver, Victoria and New Westminster, who for nearly a year was practically a cripple from Rheumatism. He was so troubled with the disease that he found it difficult to even turn over in bed. His heart appeared so weak that he could hardly walk up stairs.

Last June, he received a sample of "Fruit-a-tives". He used them and dates his recovery from that time. To-day, there is no man in Vancouver enjoying better health.

He was building a house this fall and shingled a good part of the roof in a driving rain, without suffering any bad effects". JOHN B. LACY.

Mr. E. E. Mills, (assistant postmaster at Knowlton, Que.,) also writes:

"I honestly believe that "Fruit-a-tives" is the greatest Rheumatism cure in the world". Try it yourself.

HORRIBLE TRAGEDY

Man Crazed by the Death of His Wife Poisons His Three Children and Then Commits Suicide

AN OXFORD GRADUATE

SOUTH THOMASTON, ME., AUG. 29.—Grief over the death of his wife led Edward Bennett, a graduate of Oxford university, England, who had been a resident of this town for the past six years, to murder his three children and then take his own life, today.

Two of the children were killed by chloroform and the third by cyanide of potassium and chloroform.

To make his own death certain the man went to the water's edge and there took a dose of cyanide of potassium and jumped in. His body was found 200 feet off shore when the tide receded to-night.

The murdered children were Edward, aged six; Barbara, aged four, and Nancy, aged two. Bennett's wife died three weeks ago and since that time the children had been cared for by a housekeeper, a Mrs. Thurlow.

After having killed the children, apparently during the night, Bennett wrote a minute description of how the deed was done and also a long paper in defence of his position. The letter is addressed to the Rev. Russell Woodman, pastor of the Episcopal church at Rockland, where Bennett and his family attended. It follows:

"My darling children have gone to join their mother as I am going to join them all and to face my God, who I hope, will forgive me if I have done wrong.

"Nancy and Eddie went with chloroform alone, Nancy certainly with no pain and I hope Eddie with very little. Barbara I had to give K. C. N. (cyanide of potassium) and I am afraid that she must have suffered, but it was very short and I gave her chloroform immediately so I hope it was not very bad.

"I am going to take K. C. N. As I do not know how much to take I am going down to the sea so that I may certainly drown if the K. C. N. is not sufficient. I am placing the sofa against the door so that Mrs. Thurlow cannot get in and will have to get help, which will mitigate the shock to her."

Then follows a dissertation on murder and arguments by which Bennett seeks to defend his act.

Bennett also left an itemized statement of his finances, with specific directions as to the disposition of his estate, which is not extensive.

The murder was not discovered until late to-day. Mrs. Thurlow, alarmed at the non-appearance of the Bennetts and her inability to get a response to her calls notified the neighbours, who crawled through a window into the bedroom which had been occupied by Bennett. On a cot beside her father's bed was the body of baby Nancy. She appeared to be sleeping peacefully, but investigation showed she had been dead for hours.

In an adjoining room were the bodies of the other two children, side by side on their bed. Bennett's bed had not been disturbed.

On his desk were found the letter and the financial account which the man had prepared. A search of the seashore a short distance from the house was begun just after dusk, the receding tide disclosing Bennett's body.

If this ad. induces investigation, Moon College is satisfied.

CANADIAN YACHT WINS THE KING GEORGE CUP

Special to The Examiner:

TORONTO, AUG. 30.—Canada holds the King George Cup for International yacht racing. The Vivia, skipped by E. K. M. Wedd, of the Royal Canadian Yacht Club, Toronto, defeated the Watertown, of Watertown, N.Y., and Kathleen of Kingston, in the third series to-day, making it two out of three, in favour of the Vivia. It was a lively race all the way over the triangular course, and the contending boats fought to a finish. Kathleen, the second boat, was a mile behind the Vivia, and the Watertown followed another quarter of a mile in the rear. The Vivia led all the way. This is one of the most important international races of the season.

IN DREAD OF CROUP

Every mother dreads croup unless she knows about Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine. Given in frequent small doses, at the first indication of trouble, this treatment loosens the cough and affords relief and comfort. Its use should be kept up until the child is entirely recovered.

MR. STRATTON'S FINE MEETING AT SELWYN

Large Gathering is Addressed on the Benefits of Reciprocity by the Candidate, Mr. Jas. Middleton, Ex-Reeve of Smith and Mr. H. B. Cowan of "Farm and Dairy."

A largely attended meeting of the electors living in the neighbourhood of Selwyn welcomed Mr. Stratton at his meeting there last evening.

Mr. W. J. McIlmoyle occupied the chair.

Mr. James Middleton of Peterborough and ex-Reeve of Smith, showed the advantages that the agreement would be to the great producing classes of Canada. He had been engaged in agricultural pursuits himself, but was now a resident of the city. He had looked at the agreement from all standpoints as a producer and a consumer, and was satisfied that it was in the interest of Canada that the agreement should be adopted. Recently he had taken a trip West as far as Port Arthur, and those he had met on the trains and the great majority of those with whom he had conversed were in favour of the agreement. Every obstacle was being held up to the farmer to frighten him from accepting reciprocity, but the silliest one of all was the annexation talk. While a small portion of farm produce came from the United States, as it was natural that it should come, we send from Canada a large amount of farm produce into the United States and the cost of the duty comes off us as well. It was not business to pay freight and send goods 3,500 miles away when we had a market and a better market right at our very doors. For his own part he could not see what harm it would do the cheese manufacturer to have another buyer in the market, nor could he see that it would not be advantageous to have an additional buyer for our livestock as well. He hoped that as this agreement was in the interest of the country that the electors would see that there was no mistake about its adoption.

Mr. Stratton said that during the various contests in this riding it seemed strange that the sectarian issue was always brought up with a view of distracting public attention from the main issue. He pointed out that in one contest it was the Ross Bible, in another equal rights, in another the abolition of Separate schools, in another Margaret L. Shepherd, in yet another, a temperance issue, and now there was the Protestant Protective Association, gotten up to facilitate the ends of those who could not defeat him in the discussion of the issues before the people. He, however, was quite satisfied that the opposition should make the issue whatever they pleased; he was going to discuss the question that was before the country, the agreement between Canada and our neighbours to the south.

He pointed out that twenty-five millions in cash, twenty-five million acres in land, and thirty-five million dollars' worth of completed railway might be given away under contract by Parliament when the revenue of the country was only twenty-three millions or four times the revenue of the country, without an appeal to the electorate, but when a simple agreement to benefit the all-round trade of Canada was submitted to Parliament, it must be forced to the country at an expense of a million dollars to the people. Yet this, he said, was the result of the obstructive tactics of the Opposition in Parliament, and which was being as bare-facedly defended as if it was right.

He explained the nature of the agreement, which was merely a free exchange of the products of the soil between the two countries and showed that it would be beneficial to all classes, the producer, the consumer and the manufacturer he had no doubt. He pointed out how it would increase the value of the land of the farmer, while not increasing the cost to the consumer in the cities and towns. Both parties had been hoping to obtain the agreement, and now that it had been obtained, and a most satisfactory one, it was being opposed, not in the interests of the country, but in the interests of party.

Mr. H. B. Cowan, of Farm and Dairy, pointed out the deputations that had waited upon the Government at Ottawa. The farmers of all the provinces had appeared, asking for an open market and urging that the strings interfering with their progress might be untied and they be allowed to do business practically with the world. He showed the various combines existing, to the detriment of the farmer, and he hoped that the agriculturists of the county of Peterborough would remember that this was an issue in which they were practically interested, and that the party ism which had existed for years would be dropped and the issue faced fairly and squarely. If this was done there would be but one result, a trial for the agreement.

The meeting closed with the usual cheers for the King, the candidate and the chairman.

THE TALE OF TWO WOBBLES

WOBBLE NUMBER ONE.

Mr. Borden in March, 1909—I am IN FAVOUR of a Canadian-built navy. The alternative of money contributions to Great Britain has not worked satisfactorily in Australia and has been abandoned.

Mr. Borden in November, 1910—I am AGAINST a Canadian navy and for one imperial fleet. As an emergency measure, I would present the mother country with two Dreadnoughts or the cash equivalent.

Mr. Borden in August, 1912—I WAS in favour of an emergency contribution, but I have no plans for the future. (Loud cheers from Mr. Bourassa.)

WOBBLE NUMBER TWO.

Mr. Borden in March 1904—Was there any idea that a Reciprocity treaty with the United States would in any way interfere with self-government in Canada? No. Then why should that fear exist so far as Great Britain is concerned?

Mr. Borden in July 1911—This Reciprocity agreement makes Canada a commercial appanage of the United States and virtually surrenders the control of her destinies. It interlocks our fiscal system with that of the United States and fetters the power of Parliament to alter our tariff according to the just requirements of our people.

Aged Lady Had Not Been Seen For Days--Found To Be Ill

Chief Thompson received word this morning to the effect that Miss Kidd, an aged lady who lived alone at 17 Roger street, East City, had not been seen for several days.

The Chief immediately dispatched an officer to the house who, upon arrival, was unable to gain an entrance. He thereupon went around to the rear of the premises and broke in one of the doors. His worst fears were not realised, for he found the occupant of the house curled up in some rugs inside of the front door, garbed in a night dress. How long she had been lying there is not known. She is thought to be suffering from dementia.

Dr. McPherson was summoned and did what he could to alleviate the condition of the unfortunate woman.

ECZEMA ON THE HEAD

Mr. Peterson, South Bay, Ont., writes: "For years I suffered a sort of eczema on the head. I tried four different doctors, giving each a fair trial, but the disease grew worse and spread to my arm. I got Dr. Chase's Ointment, and it has entirely cured me. I give you my name because I want other sufferers to know about this splendid Ointment."

Mrs. Alfred Davies, of Peterborough, announces the engagement of her daughter Helen, to Mr. George E. T. Sherry of Deloraine, Man. The wedding will take place on Sept. 29.

WAS BADLY INJURED

Thos. McManus Caught in a Belt in Plant of Cavendish Lumber Co. at Lakefield This Morning

NOW IN HOSPITAL

Thos. McManus, a fifteen-year-old Lakefield boy, and son of Mr. Jas. McManus, of Lakefield, is in St. Joseph's Hospital, with his left arm and several ribs broken, and suffering other minor injuries as the result of a serious accident in the lathe mill of the Cavendish Lumber Company, at Lakefield. The accident occurred about 8 o'clock this morning, but just how is uncertain. Young McManus was working at a machine and when the belt came off, went down stairs to fix it. In some manner he was drawn into the belt, and would have undoubtedly been killed had not assistance arrived. As it was his injuries are painful and serious, his arm being broken in several places to such an extent that amputation may be necessary. His injuries were attended to by Drs. Baker and Fraser of Lakefield. He was brought to Peterborough on the morning train and taken to St. Joseph's Hospital in Comstock's private ambulance. Dr. McGrath is in attendance.

GOOD POSITIONS

The Peterborough Business College is a worthy link in a chain of Seven Business Colleges, located in the cities of London, Peterborough, Welland, and the towns of Orangeville, Walkerton, Wingham, and Clinton. Owing to its high-grade work it is affiliated with the Commercial Educators' Association of Canada. It is freely admitted that owing to these connections, its students get the very best positions. Fall openings are on Aug. 28th, and Sept. 5th, but at this school each student is instructed privately at his or her own desk; students may enter any day. Many students study all at home, and others partly at home and finish at the College. As Spotton Colleges are the largest trainers in Canada, and have thirty years' experience, it would be well for young people to get their training there. Last year Mr. Spotton trained over 1,200 young people and placed them in good positions. What he has done for thousands of others he can do for you.

The funeral of the late John Daynard of 300 Albert street, whose obituary appeared in yesterday's issue, has been changed from 1.30 to 2.30 to-morrow for the convenience of the members of the A.O.F. who will attend.

STRONG EVIDENCE AGAINST BEATTIE

Prisoner's Cousin Gives Most Damaging Testimony in Regard to Conversation With Beattie Concerning Death of His Wife---"I Wish to God I Had Not Done It" Prisoner Said.

CHESTERFIELD COURT HOUSE, VA., AUG. 29.—Minute and extensive cross-examination of Paul D. Beattie, cousin of Henry Clay Beattie, Jr., indicted for wife murder, was planned by counsel for the defence to-day, with the purpose of breaking down, if possible, the story of the alleged confession of the prisoner, related on the stand yesterday by the commonwealth's star witness.

Henry C. Beattie, Jr., is sure to go on the stand in his own defence.

Court reconvened at 10.30 o'clock, and Paul Beattie immediately resumed the witness chair for cross-examination by the defence.

Chesterfield Court House, Va., Aug. 29.—Paul D. Beattie, cousin of Henry Clay Beattie, Jr., on trial, charged with wife murder, declared on the witness stand to-day that the defendant told him twenty-four hours after the murder that he was sorry he had done it.

Paul Beattie, his lips quivering and his eyes full of tears, declared that he had held back the story when he appeared at the coroner's inquest, because "I hated to testify against my own flesh and blood."

"My wife and child, and the duty I owe my city forced me to tell it," he said.

There was an audible simultaneous gasp from the spectators in the stuffy court room as the witness made his startling declaration. It was followed by an uncanny silence while Paul Beattie continued:

"Henry had told me that he wanted me to stick by him, but I said to him, 'this looks mighty black to me and you've got me into a lot of trouble Henry told me.' 'I wish to God I had not done it. I would not have done it for a million dollars, but she only married me for my money.'"

Many an eye was focused on Henry Clay Beattie, Jr., as well as Henry Clay Beattie, Sr., as Paul Beattie poured forth his "confidence." The gray-haired father of the prisoner sat with lips pressed tightly over clenched teeth, often shielding his features from view by a palm leaf fan. Beside him the prisoner fidgeted uneasily, perspiration on his brow and an alternating flush of blood on his thin face. He buried his fingers in a crumpled handkerchief, held it occasionally, to his mouth and bit it.

H. M. Smith, Jr., for the defence, jumped to his feet. He waved a thick book of typewritten testimony in the face of the witness and almost shouted as he asked him why he had not, in his entire fifty-five pages of testimony at the coroner's inquest, given the slightest intimation that Henry C. Beattie, Jr., had ever said to him: "I wish to God I had never done it."

"You were under oath to tell the whole truth," he cried, as he leaned over the bench and pointed at the witness, "Why did you not do it?"

The witness said he was in bad physical condition at the inquest—that he hardly knew what he was saying then, or that he could not remember being asked anything concerning his knowledge of Beattie's alleged confession.

To reinforce its theory of the motive the prosecution also put on the stand Mrs. J. E. Binford, mother of Beulah, the "girl in the case," and Henrietta Pittman, the chum. They told a story of Beattie's four-year acquaintance with Beulah Binford, of alleged numerous indiscretions, of the birth and death of the child named Henry Clay Binford, and how, just prior to the murder, this relationship was carried on. Enough was told of the Binford girl's connection with the case, in the opinion of the prosecution, to make it unnecessary for the commonwealth to call her to the stand.

Beulah was as much to the youth then, at thirteen, as she was just before the death of his wife, Mrs. Binford knew it. She did not oppose it. When Beulah's child was born, Mrs. Binford confessed upon the stand, she and the girl consulted and told young Beattie he was the parent "because they thought he was better able to pay the expenses than others." As a matter of fact, the girl's mother admitted the fact that the boy was not the father. Here the blackmail began. Mrs. Binford telephoned to Beattie: "If you don't get this child off Beulah's hands I'll carry it over to your father and expose you."

But Henry Beattie gave them a sum of money, said to be $800, and the child was adopted by a stranger and a year later died.

FARMERS HOLDING CROPS FOR THE PRICES PROMISED IF RECIPROCITY CARRIES

Stewart Craven Figures on Getting $6000 More for His Barley---Farmers Around Kingston Being Offered $4 More a Ton for Hay---Loyalty Argument Foolish

NAPANEE, ONT., AUG. 28.—Stewart Craven, a farmer of East Fredericksburg, in Lennox and Addington County has 2,000 bushels of barley in his barn. He refuses to sell it until after the election, waiting for reciprocity to pass. By holding his barley until that date he counts upon making a clear six hundred extra profit, saving 30 cents a bushel.

Mr. Craven is but one instance. There are many others in this section. The region of the Bay of Quinte raises some of the finest barley in America, and 75,000 bushels a year have been going to Oswego, under the present tariff. The brewers of New York State insist upon a percentage of Canadian barley to obtain the flavour for their product which the inferior barley of their own State cannot supply. It is said that the greatest eagerness is manifested by them in view of the proposed free import trade arrangement.

Their Lands Improve.

The farmers of this section used to ship an immense quantity of barley to the States, under the old reciprocity treaty. They have been forced into other crops since, and their land has greatly improved by the modern system of crop rotation. They expect to keep up the condition of their farms and still grow a greatly increased acreage of barley if reciprocity passes. Barley sells for 54 cents a bushel on this side of the lake, and eighty-eight cents in Oswego.

The farmers of Eastern Ontario have in barley as good a proposition as the Western farmers have in wheat for the freight from Lake Ontario points amounts to so much less than the cost of handling Western wheat. So far as trade with the United States seeming inconsistent with United Empire loyalty sentiment on the Bay of Quinte, it is interesting to note that the first church of the Loyalists is in Adolphustown on an inlet called Hay Bay, where the Loyalist settlers first landed. It is being revered as a memorial.

$4 More a Ton.

Kingston, Ont., Aug. 28.—Farmers in this district are being called upon by American hay buyers who offer them eleven dollars a ton for their hay under present conditions and will have it stored. If reciprocity passes the buyers offer to give the farmers fifteen dollars a ton, the extra four dollars being the present duty. The buyers are signing agreements to that effect and making a deposit for the hay which they will take in the winter.

E. Woodman, of Wolfe Island, who raises a lot of hay, told your correspondent this morning that he had sold on the above terms and said that if the farmers were wise they would vote for the reciprocity pact.

BLACK-HANDERS HURL BOMB AT FRUIT STORE

Special to The Examiner:

NEW YORK, N.Y., AUG. 30.—A powerful bomb, flung by blackhanders, from a taxicab at the shop of a wealthy Italian fruiter on Lexington avenue, this morning, tore a great hole in the pavement and demolished the front of the shop and shook many houses of the adjacent fashionable Fifth Avenue district, causing great excitement. Several people were thrown down by the shock, but there was nobody in the store at the time, and nobody was hurt. The taxicab got away, leaving no clue.

HORSE HAD TO BE SHOT

While driving along the north end of George street last night a horse belonging to Mr. Saunders of Fraserville broke its leg in some unknown manner. The horse was struck by a train a week ago, and last night's accident is thought to be the outcome of the injuries received at that time.

P. C. Kidd was notified and he despatched the wounded animal with one well directed shot.

WEDNESDAY, AUG. 30, 1911

OPERA HOUSE MASS MEETING.

The public is reminded of the mass meeting in the interests of the candidature of Hon. Mr. Stratton, on Thursday night, Aug. 31, to be held in the Grand Opera House. The principal speaker of the evening will be Hon. Geo. P. Graham, Minister of Railways and Canals. There will be much anxiety to hear him, because he has been a good friend to West Peterborough, and has not turned a deaf ear to Mr. Stratton's many requests for the provision of public improvements in West Peterborough in the interests of its citizens. There will be anxiety to hear him because he is able to justify his reputation as one of the best platform orators in Canada. He always has something to say, and says it in a lively and effective way. Mr. Graham speaks with the authority of a Minister of the Crown and the authority of a man who knows what he is talking about, and knows how to do it. Any one who misses hearing Mr. Graham will miss a great treat in the way of pugnant, logical and convincing argument. Mr. R. R. Hall, who will act as chairman, will also speak briefly, and Mr. Stratton, the candidate, who has conducted an energetic and support-winning campaign, will also address the gathering. Special seating accommodation will be set apart for ladies and their escorts. The chair will be taken at 8 o'clock.

THE FARMERS' CHANCE.

The reciprocity agreement question is the greatest issue pertaining to the interests of the farmers that has ever been before the country. It is the issue above all others on which they should stand together because it affects them primarily. It is an issue which every farmers' organization that has been heard from has endorsed. The farmers who are known to be opposing it are those who are reading the straight party press, who are "loaded up the wrong way" by cries and appeals that have no bearing upon the merits of the matter, and who have never taken any part in an open discussion of the question at any farmers' meeting, or ever read one line of the agreement itself.

SINCERE CONSERVATIVE TESTIMONY.

In the beginning, when the reciprocity agreement was first presented to the House, many Conservative members and many newspapers approved of it — thought almost too good to be true. That was before it was made a political question—before it was thought that it could be used to beat Laurier—before the monopolists, "interests" and combines ordered Mr. Borden to "go again" it.

As a sample the Kingston Standard, the Conservative journal of that city, gave an enthusiastic welcome to the reciprocity agreement. The Standard was particularly scornful of the cry that the sale of Canadian farm products to the United States would taint the loyalty of the Canadian farmer. To-day the Standard is opposing the Laurier Government, but not on reciprocity. It prefers to dwell on the shortcomings of the Government's naval policy, and on its general record. On reciprocity the Standard said:

> Is free access to a great market like the United States not as desirable to Canada as access to any of the other markets for which we have so long contended? If our farmers can sell more goods at higher prices than ever in their history, is this privilege to be denied them merely because it is offered by our next-door neighbour? Are we so skeptical of our own loyalty to Great Britain that we cannot trust ourselves to enter into closer commercial relations with a neighbour, lest thereby we be weaned away from the mother country? Is it of such stuff as this we are made, that it is feared we will sell our birthright for a mess of pottage?"

BURNHAM-BORDEN-BOURASSA-BUNCOMBE.

Our good friends, the Conservatives, have not got beyond the a-B-c class in campaigning and policy. The whole "outfit" seems to run to B. When a man is described as having a "bee in his bonnet" it is meant to say that he is not quite level-headed, a little queer, not quite compos mentis. When a party runs to the big B, as in the above combination, there is some reason to doubt its political sanity and its sincerity. This combination gives evidence of its weakness, in pushing to the front an issue which has no bearing upon the issue in this contest—the reciprocity agreement.

It is alleged that this will destroy British connection, though it has no more to do with endangering British connection than the nebular hypothesis.

Thus we have the flag waving absurdity that marks Mr. Borden's campaigning. At his meeting here as elsewhere, we have grown men waving flags like children. We often hear of a man pinching himself to see if he is awake; these men wave flags to try to convince themselves that they are loyal. The man that is loyal at heart doesn't need to wave a flag to prove it; he is content to let his life and conduct show it. The really righteous man, at heart and in life, does not, and does not need to, boast of his goodness. It is only the hypocrite that offensively asserts his piety to cover the underlying rottenness.

The real original flag-wavers were "the Scribes, Pharisees, hypocrites," that our Blessed Lord lashed with his scorn. They prayed on street corners, and flaunted their phylacterian flags on their arms—"to be seen of men." They are the prototypes of the men who to-day prostitute the flag, prostitute loyalty, and even prostitute the church and religion, in the attempt to gain a little pitiful party advantage.

The self-assertive attitude of loyalty—the smug assumption that Mr. Borden and his followers are the only loyal, would be insulting, if it were not absurd.

It is as absurd as the contention that free exchange of farm products will lead to annexation. The experience of history not only refutes this, but shows, that freer trade has an opposite effect.

The "only-loyal" Conservatives of Montreal, among them Sir John Abbott, afterwards Conservative premier, got up an annexation league because of restricted trade—they wanted freer trade with the United States, and in default of reciprocity, wanted annexation to the United States. That was in 1848. When reciprocity was got in 1854-66, and prosperity followed, the Conservative annexation movement, and annexation sentiment, died; was drowned under a wave of prosperity.

The Opposition, voiced by Mr. Borden, declares that "if we get" these advantages under reciprocity or if the Yankees "put the screws on" by threatening to end the agreement, the people of Canada would be tempted to go in for annexation to secure continuation of trade benefits." This is beautiful reasoning from men who say that the reciprocity agreement will give no benefits. It is a complete surrender of the case against the agreement.

Here again history disproves the Bordenesque contention. In 1866, when the United States abrogated the reciprocity treaty, against the protest of Sir John Macdonald, who deplored the loss it would bring, there was not a whisper of annexation, and Confederation was the answer.

A little later we had similar experience. From 1866 to 1890, Canadian farmers sold millions of bushels of barley at high prices to the United States, under a moderate duty. The McKinley bill, of 1890, raised the United States duty on barley, to the prohibitive figure of 30 cents per bushel.

The Canadian farmers, during the 17 years before that high duty—with 15 cents duty — sold to the United States 135,279,351 bushels of barley, amounting to 90 millions of dollars, for the average price of 67 cents a bushel. The advance of duty from 15 to 30 cents was a body blow to the barley trade. In the 17 years after the high duty was put on, the Canadian farmer could sell only 6,808,171 bushels of barley to the United States at 42 cents per bushel, worth only about 2 1-2 million as against 90 million dollars.

Did this loss of trade, this hard blow to the farmer, have the effect the McKinley duty of 30 cents was intended to have—coerce Canada into annexation? No, we told the United States to this effect: "We like your trade and would be glad to continue it; but if you refuse it, we shall get on without you. We Canadians are British, and it will take more than a little, or even a great deal of trade profit, to destroy our British connection."

Why, indeed, should trade lead to annexation? Has our trade always been with the Mother country? Have we not done a big trade with the United States, without any annexation sentiment?

We have been trading with the United States for the past sixty years. Assuming the average total trade to have been 100 million dollars per year—it was 404 millions last year—our total trade with the United States in that time amounted to 6,000 million dollars, and there was no disloyalty nor annexation.

In the last five years our imports from Great Britain, even when stimulated by the loyal Liberal Preference, some real loyalty, amounted to 436 million dollars. In the same period our imports from the United States amounted to 1,055 million dollars. Did the Conservatives who did their share in importing these goods think they were promoting annexation and smashing British connection?

There is no disloyalty in our trade with the United States. It is our nearest market and our largest market. It is, therefore, our best market, and it will be to our advantage to get our farm products into it free of duty; and every farmer whose eyes are not blinded by party prejudice, whose eyes are not bandaged by the abused British flag in the hands of bogus loyalists—loyalists for party profit—will acknowledge it and vote for it as thousands are doing.

Take another example, that larger trade with the United States, than with Great Britain, is not disloyal and disrupting. In the past five years, Canada's total trade with the world amounted to 3,095 millions of dollars. Of this, our trade with Great Britain was 1,092 million dollars, and with the United States 1,570 millions. That is, our trade with the United States in the five years, was 478 million dollars more than with Great Britain; and our trade with the United States was 525 millions greater than with all other countries of the world, Britain included.

We have done this trade without any impairment of our loyalty to Britain and without any increase of political friendliness with the United States.

All the facts go to show that, even with a high tariff wall, the United States has been, and is, our best—our natural—market for our natural produce, and that Britain is our best market for dutiful devotion.

It also goes to show that the contention of Mr. Borden and Mr. Burnham and Mr. Buncombe, all merge themselves into Mr. Buncombe.

All this talk of disloyalty and disruption of British connection, in connection with reciprocity, is rot—a very stale red-herring, drawn across the trail to hide the real issue.

It shouldn't fool a child, let alone a grown man with beard and brains.

CANADIAN ANNEXATION.

Yonkers (N.Y.) Daily News.

The possibility of annexation of Canada to the United States is figuring largely in the hot electoral campaign over reciprocity now under way over the line. In view of the intense hostility of that idea invariably manifested by Canadian people, one wonders that anyone can discuss it seriously.

On this side of the line there are a good many people favourable to the idea, though the majority would doubtless vote No.

As a test of Canadian sentiment, a writer for the World's Work in 1905 addressed three hundred letters to the most prominent men in the dominion. These letters asked the question whether, if such an annexation could be brought about peacefully, without friction with England, Canada being simply merged in becoming one section of our country, just as the East, South, and the Pacific Slope is one section, whether the person addressed would favour it.

Out of these three hundred people, only one man wrote favouring annexation, and he failed to sign his name. Most of the rest wrote in opposition.

The Canadians based their objection on such ideas as the following: That their people are more regardful of law than Americans, that we have too many race problems, that wealth is more evenly divided with them, that the trusts are less powerful, and on their personal affection and sentiment for the British flag.

Curiously enough, some of these Canadians seemed more or less seriously to entertain the idea that the United States might be annexed to Canada. Half in joke, yet with some serious intent, Bennett Rosemond, member of parliament, wrote that at the start Canada might take in one or two states at a time, and as our people became trained to have respect for law, they could take in more, until at least the larger part of our states were absorbed.

Just as every American would feel that such a suggestion was absolutely preposterous, so the Canadians cling with equal vehemence to their political relations.

The recent enormous growth of the Canadian Northwest points to a future for Canada exceeding in prosperity and importance anything ever dreamed for it a decade ago.

RECIPROCITY PROMISES SOMETHING FOR THE HOUSEWIFE

During the past few years there has been a constant cry from the housewives that the cost of living has been going up. Every housekeeper knows that for one reason or another the expense of maintaining a table has seemed to steadily increase. General prosperity has led to some extravagance, and as a philosopher of the day put it: "It is the cost of high living rather than the high cost of living." At the same time, it would be easy to name dozens of daily necessities that are more expensive in Canada to-day than they were ten years ago. Trade combinations and agreements have had not a little to do with this.

One of the features of the reciprocity agreement now before the country is the reduction of duty on a number of staple articles of food. The reduction is not large in any instance, but the protest that has come from the manufacturers of some of the items in this country shows that they expect to have to make a cut in price, and perhaps lose a little of the large profit they have been able to exact under the existing tariff. Some of the items affected, and the tariff reduction made, by the reciprocity agreement with the United States are as follows:

Articles	Present Duty	Duty Under Reciprocity
Cheese, pound	3c	Free
Sweet potatoes, bushel	10c	Free
Salmon, prepared	30%	Free
Oysters, in bulk, gallon	10c	Free
Lobsters, fresh	25%	Free
Meats, fresh or refrigerated, pound	3c	1½c
Bacon and hams, pound	2c	1½c
Beef, salted, in barrels, pound	2c	1½c
Pork, barrelled in brine, pound	2c	1½c
Meats, other, salted, pound	2c	1½c
Canned meats and canned poultry	27½%	20%
Lard and compounds thereof	2c	1¼
Tomatoes and other vegetables in cans	1½c	1½c
Oatmeal and rolled oats, per 100 lbs.	60c	50c
Prepared cereals and foods	25%	17½%
Macaroni and vermicelli, pound	1½c	1c
Biscuits, wafers and cakes, sweetened	27½%	25%
Pickles, sauces and catsups	35%	32½%
Sardines, 30-36 oz. boxes	6c	5c
Condensed milk, pound	3½c	2c
Biscuits, without sweetening	25%	20%
Fruits, in airtight tins, pound	2½	2c

Every housekeeper knows the burden of an added few cents per pound when counted by the week or the year. If reciprocity is adopted the relief given will, in no small degree, compensate for the climbing prices of the last few years.

Under reciprocity the consumer, as well as the producer will get a square deal.

IT WILL HELP THE CITY CONSUMER

The Montreal Gazette, the old stand-by of the Conservative party in Eastern Canada, makes a significant admission in to-day's issue.

It says: "The trade figures (for 1909-10) show that reciprocity, if it would benefit anybody, and if it could be regarded merely as a commercial treaty incapable of having political effect, WOULD BE A HELP TO THE PEOPLE OF THE CITIES."

The Gazette has paid a great tribute to the trade agreement.

What Shall I Wear?

The average woman is not fully decided what kind of suit she wants.

She has seen fashion pictures in style books, in magazines-has seen fashion plates. From all of these she has a general idea of what she wants.

At Elliot's she can see the suit that will meet her ideals, her suit, which combines all the new touches of fashion, a well fitting, tailored suit of individual style.

While we have the cheaper suits, it is to the higher class dressy garments, which we are featuring this season, that we more particularly wish to draw your attention. We have these in all their bewildering beauty and up-to-dateness, we show many hundreds of different styles and hardly two alike.

COATS AND WRAPS

The slender silhouette coat cut in straight lines is correct this season, it is very graceful and becoming. The American and the French designers are constructing their new models on these lines.

The vogue for the large collar is very strong, and many novel cuts are shown, among them are round, pointed and sailor effects, frequently these collars reach into revers but some only reach to the shoulders.

Hood effects are also much in evidence.

ELLIOT'S DEPARTMENT SHOWS GREAT VARIETY

Never before was there such a beautiful variety of ladies' garments shown, Scotch tweeds, herring-bone effects, fancy mixtures and double faced cloths are all prominently featured.

The double faced clothe promise to be the favourites for the season.

These reversible cloths are shown in a great variety of weaves, and sometimes in a combination of two weaves, as, for example, a smooth surface on one side and a rough effect on the other.

Some have a plain colour on one side and a stripe or a check or a plaid on the other, while others have two contrasting colours.

The majority of these clothe have a rough effect which promises to be unusually strong this season.

Children's Blanket Coats

These dressy little garments come in all sizes up to 14 years of age, made from all wool navy cloth trimmed with red sash, red lined hood, red trimming and large brass buttons $3.50 to $6.50

Stork Department

On the third floor in our stork department you will find everything that a baby can wear.

Girl's Department

We show a great range of girls' dresses in all the new cloths made up in the new styles of the season.

Millinery

Miss Noble with her staff will be in the millinery parlors on Friday

The high conical hat will be quite the run this winter, but we will describe them more fully later.

WRESTLERS READY FOR BIG BOUT

CHICAGO, AUG. 29.—Not even the presence of the Marquis of Queensbury could make George Hackenschmidt, the "Russian Lion," change the even tenor of his way and to do any more hard training before the Labour Day bout with Frank Gotch for the world's heavyweight wrestling championship. He already is on edge, and he declines to permit himself to go stale.

Gotch Still on His Farm.

HUMBOLT, IOWA, AUG. 29.—Although Frank Gotch, world's champion heavyweight wrestler, declines to tell when he will go to Chicago for his Labour Day match with George Hackenschmidt, it is understood here today that Gotch will arrive in the Windy City Thursday and complete his training. Gotch continued hard secret training to-day in direct contrast to Hackenschmidt, who in his training camp in Chicago, has done no hard work since his arrival in America

The Reciprocity agreement saves the people from those who would monopolize their food supply.

VALUES INFIELD AT $400,000

DETROIT, MICH. AUG. 29.—Confident of the ability of the Athletics to win the American league bunting over the Tigers, Connie Mack is not concerned as to the team that will win the National League pennant. The Athletic's leader said to-day that his men were within the world's series whether Chicago, Philadelphia or Pittsburg was his opponent. Mack estimated the Athletic infield at $400,000. Collins, Baker, Barry and McInnis, says the Philadelphia leader are worth $100,000 each.

"These players will be good for ten years yet," said Mack to-day, "and the way players are selling to-day they're worth the sum I named. No I don't suppose I'll be offered $100,000 for any one of them," said the lanky one.

LAWN BOWLING

The first round of the novice singles of the Peterborough Lawn Bowling Club will be concluded to-night Those who have not played their games should do so this evening. The scores so far are as follows

Cunningh... 12 R H Hall 9
McCarthur 14, Dr... 5
Maynard 16, Harper 3
McKenzie 19, Bambrick 8.
Campbell 13, McKnight 8.

BASEBALL

Cleveland has the Highlanders' goat and Detroit is duck soup for the Chase crew.

The two Jacksons in the big show, Joe of Cleveland and George of Boston, are certainly great hitters.

A total of 57,000 persons attended the National League games in New York and Brooklyn in one afternoon recently.

Umpire Evans of the American League was a sub on the Cornell baseball team when Hugh Jennings was coaching the squad.

The Chicago Cubs have purchased Pitcher Slapnicka of Rockford, the sensational heaver of the Wisconsin-Illinois League.

Frank Schulte of the Cubs broke his home-run bat, but found another club, and is once more slumming the circuit clouts.

Pitcher "Wild Bill" Donovan of the Detroit Tigers, next to "Cy" Young, is the oldest player in active service in the major leagues.

Tom Jones, a former Detroit player, now with Milwaukee, will coach the Michigan University baseball squad next spring.

Young Becker trimmed the White Sox in Washington, but the Sox got back at him in Chicago, making 20 hits for a total of 28.

The Athletics' pitchers are now going at top speed and the team that is able to pass the champions will surely be some ball team.

Manager Fred Clarke is hitting the ball in the regulation way. The old Pirate is working like a young phenom just breaking into the game.

President Russell of the Boston Nationals says that he is confident that "Cy" Young can win as many games as the other Rustler pitchers. Is that a knock or a boost?

With their managers, "Red" Dooin and Roger Bresnahan out of the game on account of injuries, the Philadelphia Quakers and the St. Louis Cardinals are surely in tough luck at this stage of the pennant fight.

The Kingston Whig says: Ashton, the mound artist for the Grand Trunks of Belleville, has a great record in Montreal. He has been pitching there all season for the Richmonds and had not lost a game and yet the C.L.C. team pounded him to pieces in two games. Either he has been over-estimated, where he comes from, or else the Montreal teams are not such heavy-sluggers as the engine builders of Kingston.

Open Day and Night

ANNIVERSARY SERVICES OF FRASERVILLE CHURCH WERE MARKED SUCCESS

Rev. Mr. McKenzie, of Centreville, Conducted the Morning Service---Dr. Marsh Officiated in the Evening---Harvest Festival and Entertainment on Tuesday.

FRASERVILLE, AUG. 30. — The morning service at the church was conducted by Rev. Mr. McKenzie of the Centreville Presbyterian church, and was largely attended, as was the evening service. The church was beautifully decorated with agricultural products, giving a very appropriate appearance to the place of worship for a harvest festival. On each side of the pulpit, numerous kinds of grains were placed and these, which were placed in formal shape, were decorated with apples, pumpkins and other fruits and vegetables. In the windows were placed beautiful flowers, which filled the church with their sweet fragrance and added much to the brightness of the occasion by their bright, cheery appearance. Some very appropriate selections were rendered by the choir, which attended both services, all the members turning out.

At the morning service Rev. Mr. McKenzie chose his text from the 27th chapter of Acts, 29th verse, "Then, fearing lest we should fall upon rocks, they cast four anchors out of the stern and wished for the day." He clearly outlined the precarious position in which Paul was placed during the terrible storm that was raging on the Mediterranean sea and showed the presence of mind and greater than all, the faith manifested by Paul in the hour of danger. He went among the sailors, soldiers and passengers, cheering them, not knowing at what moment the ship would be broken to pieces.

"They cast four anchors from the stern." The reverend speaker in this illustration, compared the ship as sailing on the sea of life and the anchors represented, faith, hope, love and loyalty. He went on to show that people sailing on the sea of life, were almost sure to meet with obstacles, and if they have none of these anchors they are almost certain to be shipwrecked. He divided the class of people into groups, representing the different stages of life, and in clear explanations and beautiful phrases, distinctly showed the position of each.

The evening service on Sunday was conducted by Rev. Dr. Marsh of the Springville Presbyterian church. His sermon was illustrated by lime-light views, which proved very interesting. Owing to the threatening rain there was not as large a crowd as there might otherwise have been, but notwithstanding this fact, there was a goodly number present to hear the concluding anniversary sermon.

The Entertainment.

The Harvest Festival and entertainment held on Tuesday evening, was one of the most successful in the history of the Methodist church Ladies' Aid Society, under whose auspices the event was held. Great anxiety was felt on the part of the society during the few days previous, which were rainy, lest the event should be spoiled for the third time, having been postponed twice previously on account of the rain, but fortunately the weather was fine and the evening was an ideal one. A harvest dinner was served from five until eight, after which a splendid programme was given in the church. The programme was as follows:

Solo—Mr. Bickell, of Canton.
Address——Rev. Mr. Brown, of the Methodist church, Millbrook.
Solo—Mr. Bickell.
Recitation—Miss Marion Dawson.
Solo—Master Edgar Finlay.
Address—Rev. Mr. McKenzie, of the Centreville Presbyterian church.
Solo—Mr. Bickell.
Address— Rev. Dr. Marsh, Springville Presbyterian church.
Solo—Miss Keitha Kidd.
Address —Rev. Mr. Clarry, Cavanville Methodist church.
Solo—Mr. Bickell.
Solo—Mr. Bickell.

The programme was an exceptionally well arranged and well given one, all those who took part showing talent of unusual brilliancy. The appreciation of the large audience was shown in no uncertain manner and the success of the event is only more evidence of the energetic and ambitious work on the part of the Ladies' Aid, who are to be congratulated upon the great success of this event, as well as numerous others previously given.

MR. KERR'S SUCCESSFUL WARSAW MEETING

Mr. R. J. McLaughlin, K.C., and Others Discuss Reciprocity at a Well Attended Meeting Last Evening---Pact is Popular With the Farmers of Dummer.

A rousing meeting in the interests of Mr. F. D. Kerr, Liberal Candidate in East Peterborough, was held in Warsaw, last night. The chair was occupied by Dr. Munro, of Warsaw, while the speakers were Mr. Ellis, of Farm and Dairy, Mr. R. J. McLaughlin, K.C., of Toronto, Mr. Edward Hawthorne, and the Liberal Candidate, Mr. Kerr.

Mr. Ellis gave a very practical address, in which he gave quotations of farm produce on the United States markets and compared them with prices on the Canadian markets. He showed most convincingly how the Canadian farmers would materially benefit by the free entry of farm produce to the great cities of the American Republic.

Mr. Edward Hawthorne, Liberal candidate for East Peterborough in the local elections, spoke as a practical farmer on the benefit to be derived by reciprocity in natural products with the United States. Mr. Hawthorne also made reference to the manner in which the opposition in East Peterborough were endeavouring to bring in questions not identified with the main issue. This was in the hope, merely, that the attention of the farmers would be taken off the real issue—reciprocity.

Mr. R. J. McLaughlin, K. C., of Toronto, made a splendid address. He showed how the matter of reciprocity had never been, until just lately, a party question. Both parties were always in favour of it. Now, when free access to the American markets was in sight, the Conservative party, including Mr. Sexsmith, the member for East Peterborough, had, for purely political reasons, opposed it. Mr. McLaughlin dealt with the benefits that had accrued to Canada under the old reciprocity treaty, and contended that the advantages to be gained by the free access in natural products to the United States market were many times greater today.

Mr. Kerr, the Liberal candidate, who was holding a meeting at Cottesloe the same evening, arrived at the Warsaw meeting before it closed, and got an enthusiastic reception In his address he spoke of the encouragement he was receiving throughout all portions of the riding, and of the strong reciprocity sentiment that existed amongst the farmers of East Peterborough.

The meeting closed with the usual cheers.

OBITUARY

SAMUEL KENNEDY.

Last evening, at 384 London St., Samuel, son of the late John Kennedy, of Smith, passed away at the age of 47 years.

The deceased was born in Smith, but had been a resident of the city for about twenty-five years, during which time he has been a devoted employee of the city authorities. He was also a constant attendant of the George Street Methodist church.

He is survived by a sorrowing wife, five sons, Roland of Calgary, Percy, Bruce and Arthur of Peterborough, and George, of Toronto, and three daughters, Mrs. Lottie Ainsbury of Regina, and Alice and Etta of Peterborough. His demise is also lamented by three brothers, Ernie of Peterborough, Jim and Jack of Smith, and three sisters, Mrs. Charlotte Holgrave, of Toronto, Mrs. Parker of Bay City, and Mrs. Carter of Smith.

The funeral will take place at 2 o'clock on Thursday afternoon, at Bay's cemetery, Lakefield, Rev. Isaac Couch officiating.

I was pale and weakly for years. Miller's Compound Iron Pills brought about a change. Wm. Madill.

DEATHS.

HAMLIN.—Yesterday morning, at Campbellford, Winifred, the three-months' old daughter of Mr. Herbert Hamlin, formerly of Peterborough.

The body was conveyed by G. T. R. to Peterborough last evening, and will be interred in the Little Lake cemetery to-morrow afternoon.

MAN KILLED AT REVELSTOKE, B.C.

A letter was received by Chief Thompson this morning from the Chief of Police at Revelstoke, informing him of the death of a man named Rickaby, who was killed on August 24th in the railway yards at Revelstoke and asking him to locate a brother named Alfred Rickaby in this city.

The letter reads as follows:

Revelstoke, B.C., Aug. 24, 1911.

Chief of Police, Peterborough—

About 8.30 this morning a man named Rickaby was killed on the railway track in the yard here. From inquiry made, we find that he has a brother in Peterborough named Alfred Rickaby, so I am writing to you, to ask if you will kindly look the man up and let him know of his brother's death.

Thanking you for any trouble this may put you to. Would deem it a favour if you would let me know whether you can locate him or not.

Yours truly,
H. M. PARRY,
Chief of Police.

Alfred Rickaby was located by the 'Examiner' this morning, working with the construction gang on the site of the new dam at Auburn.

He thinks that the Rickaby who was killed at Revelstoke was a brother of his. He has three brothers, namely, George in Dublin, Ireland, Elias and Josiah in America, present whereabouts unknown.

The deceased would be either one of the latter. He saw both Elias and Josiah about six years ago and the last he heard of them, one was in the States and the other in Montreal.

Outside of the fact that the deceased's name was Rickaby, and that he has a brother here, there is nothing in the letter that would serve to identify the remains as being those of either Elias or Josiah Rickaby.

Alfred Rickaby stated to the Examiner this morning that he would endeavour to secure further information from Revelstoke. He resides at 428 Water street.

PRAISE FOR POPULAR CEREAL

Some interesting, and at the same time, extremely gratifying letters have recently been received by the manufacturers of Kellogg's Toasted Corn Flak.

They come, for the most part, from fathers and mothers of families, whose children have been benefitted by a steady diet of this favourite package food. Many of them testify strongly and in a whole-hearted way to the general bodily improvement observable in the young ones after they have eaten Toasted Corn Flakes regularly for even a short time. Others relate enthusiastically how vigorous and full of vitality the youngsters become when allowed to eat freely of this prepared cereal. Still others breathe a spirit of relief, as if the mother had at last found a food which not only resulted in an improvement to the general health of a sickly child, but was so easily digestible that the ailing little one could eat freely of it without any danger of over-taxing a weak stomach.

All of these letters seem to be inspired by an honest desire to testify to the goodness of Kellogg's Toasted Corn Flakes and are imbued with a spirit of thankfulness to the makers of such a product.

Many of the enthusiastic parents have gone so far as to send photographs of youngsters after a few weeks' daily use of the cereal, and to judge by the plump bodies, healthy clear complexions and bright eyes of the tots, the diet is immensely good for them. One in particular, photographed with a box of Kellogg's Toasted Corn Flakes in his arms, is a perfect picture of rosy health and happiness that amply justifies the careful parents in their selection of the main item of his diet.

The most pleasing feature to the manufacturers is that these letters are entirely unsolicited. They represent the spontaneous expression of the gratification and satisfaction of any parents at having found in Kellogg's Toasted Corn Flakes a food which nourishes their youngsters, and improves their health, mentality and spirits to a marked degree. In these circumstances there are many who would naturally feel impelled to write to the manufacturer, stating their happy experience.

The receipt of an occasional letter of this kind, voluntarily written to the makers of a food product, is most likely not at all uncommon, but that such a large number should find their way into the mail of the Kellogg Toasted Corn Flake Co., is surely a peculiarly forcible indication of the favour with which the public regard their goods. From this it may be deduced that the actual results from the regular use of this food are strikingly demonstrated in a very short time and that the makers have produced a cereal that amply substantiates the claims they make for it.

SHOT ON A CROWDED THOROUGHFARE

SHELBYVILLE, IND., AUG. 25.—Charles Tindall an attorney of this city, was shot twice in the right side by Edward C. Van Pelt shortly after 11 o'clock this morning and died one-half hour later. Van Pelt gave himself up to the police and was placed in jail without bond.

The shooting took place in South Harrison street, a crowded thoroughfare.

Van Pelt is a brother-in-law of United States Senator Works of California. He is a civil war veteran and an active lodge worker. He is about sixty years old and has a family. He said the trouble was over Court of Honour affairs. Tindall was supreme director of the lodge here. Mrs. Van Pelt was re-elected secretary of the lower court two years ago, but recently resigned.

Tindall was going toward his home on his way to dinner in company with Thomas Whittaker, who is employed in his office. They had walked only a few blocks when Van Pelt who was seated on a chair in front of a drug store, saw them coming. He stepped toward them and fired one shot, which went through Tindall's coat sleeve. The lawyer jumped back of Whittaker, but another bullet struck him in the right side. He ran into the pharmacy, where he said:

"My God, he's got me this time," and fell unconscious.

There were no words between the two men before the shooting and Van Pelt was probably not more than two feet away from the lawyer when he fired.

Van Pelt, in a statement at the jail, said Tindall made a charge to the national officers of the Court of Honour that his wife, while secretary of the local lodge, had misused lodge funds. Mrs. Van Pelt, rather than stand the strain of such a fight and battle for her rights, withdrew from the lodge.

Van Pelt declared that since then Tindall had not passed on the street without sneering at him.

Mrs. Van Pelt is prostrated by the trouble. Tindall was 38 years old. His widow is a daughter of George M. Wright.

An unfortunate accident occurred yesterday afternoon by which the infant child of Mr. Harvey Miller had his leg broken. THE GAME LAWS

No Shooting Permissible Until Sept. 15th This Year

Fishery Inspector John Watt has asked the Examiner to call the attention of local sportsmen to the change in the game laws in regard to the beginning of the open season for shooting. By the new Act, snipe, quail, plover, or any other birds or waders may not be killed before September 15th, instead of Sept. 1st, as has been the case hitherto. Duck shooting does not commence until the same date, Sept. 15. Partridge may not be killed until October 15th.

THE LAST CHANCE

The Government has thrown open for entry 25,000 homesteads in Western Canada in the Provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan. These homesteads are within 30 miles of present lines of the Canadian Northern Railway (and some much less) and all will undoubtedly be served by railway lines within a short time.

The low round trip homeseekers' fares to points in Alberta and Saskatchewan are in effect only two more days this year, September 5th and 19th. The fares are low, the return limits long and the stop-over privileges liberal.

Write at once for the latest Homeseekers' guide, fares and other particulars. The Canadian Northern Railway offers a choice of all routes, reaches nearly every part of Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba, thus enabling one to examine all sections and make a wise selection.

All particulars can be obtained by writing to R. L. Fairbairn, Asst. General Passenger Agent, Canadian Northern Railway, Toronto, Ont.

ENGINES RAN AMUCK

(Lindsay Post)

Monday evening the corner was knocked out of the round house. The shunter was shunting on the coal chute, and there was another engine at the foot of the chute. The rails were slippery and when the engineer of the shunter applied the brakes the engine slipped and ran backwards, crashing into the engine which was standing near the switch. The tender of the shunter was so badly damaged that it had to be put on trucks and run out of the way. The engine which was standing near the foot of the chute was badly damaged, the front being knocked in. She was run into the shop for repairs. When the shunter struck the other engine she knocked it into the corner of the round-house, with the result that the upright corner post was broken, the bricks dislodged, and the corner of the roof let down. The train men immediately set to work at clearing away the wreck, and are busily engaged in repairing the round house.

SOME INTERESTING LOCAL COW TESTING INFORMATION

In looking over the records of the Cow Testing Associations of Norwood, Indian River, Keene, Warsaw, and Shearer, for the month of July, some startling figures are shown, which should cause every farmer to pause and consider whether every animal in his herd is providing sufficient milk or fat to pay for the feed consumed, and leave a fair profit. This can be readily ascertained by weighing the milk of each cow three days per month throughout the milking period, and saving samples for testing.

The lowest amount of milk, as shown by the July records, was 495 pounds, while the lowest amount of fat was 16 lbs. The highest amount of milk was 1,521 lbs. and the highest amount of fat was a little over 51 lbs. Valuing the fat at 22 cents a lb., there is a little over $8 difference between the poorest cow and the best. The best cow is owned by Mr. Andrew Marks of Norwood.

A striking instance of the danger of considering a herd, collectively, instead of individually, is to be seen in a herd of five cows, which averaged 800 lbs. of milk. On looking over the record of each cow it was found that one cow gave 1,500 lbs. of milk, another gave 900 lbs., while the other three fell below the average, one giving only 400 lbs.

A herd of six cows, belonging to Mr. Louis Brown of Norwood, made an exceptionally high record in June, averaging 1,444 lbs. of milk, and 49¾ lbs. of fat. One cow produced 1,674 lbs. of milk, but the largest amount of fat was produced by a cow, which gave 1,293 lbs. of milk testing 42%, thus producing over 54 lbs. of fat. A remarkable fact in connection with this cow is that Mr. Brown has on two occasions offered to sell her for $20, as he did not realize her value until he began testing his cows. As this cow has, in June and July, produced a little over a hundred lbs. of fat, and, valuing the fat at 23 cents a lb., she has brought in for her owner, in two months, over $22, or more than he offered to sell her for.

Mr. Brown has grown a soiling crop of peas and oats for quite a number of years, which is fed when the grass becomes dry and short. For about fifteen years a pure-bred Holstein sire has been used and the herd is certainly returning to its owner the results of good breeding and proper feeding. Would it not be very interesting to know just what each cow in your herd is doing. Can you afford to take the chances of disposing of any of your cows without knowing exactly what they are producing for you.

"RURAL BORN" WRITES TO RIGHT MR. PECK

To the Editor of The Examiner.

Dear Sir,—I notice that Mr. Peck made the statement at North Monaghan that there were as many farmers in the United States in proportion to population as in Canada. The facts are the urban population in the United States is 2 to 1, rural, and the former is rapidly increasing. In Canada it is 2 rural to 1 urban, which proportion is also rapidly increasing. In a few years the U. S. must cease to export foodstuffs, while Canada will have increasing quantities to export every year. In our northern climate our fruits and grains develop more perfectly, the former being of better flavour, and the latter harder than the southern articles, and therefore on an equal footing will always be preferred by both the Canadian and United States consumers. Don't worry about the Canadian farmer, Mr. Peck; we can compete with the world in every branch of his business and come out on top every time.

Yours etc.,
Rural Born.

FOOD RIOTS IN FRANCE

PARIS, AUG. 30.— Food riots in many provincial towns and cities, because of the high prices of food, necessitated the calling out of troops in some quarters where the mob raided stores and carried away the eatables in sight. The situation is serious.

ANNUAL EXCURSION

The annual excursion of the Chemong Athletic Club from Bridgenorth to Lake Simcoe, per steamer Stoney Lake, will take place on Wednesday, Sept. 6th. The steamer will leave Bridgenorth at 5.30 a.m., calling at the new wharf, Braden's Point, at 5.45 a.m., Indian Village at 6, Gannon's Bridge at 6.30, and Sandy Point at 7.00. The outing promises to be the most enjoyable in the history of the Athletic Club.

BIG JOINT MEETING

EGANSVILLE, ONT., AUG. 30. — Five thousand people are here to attend a monster joint political picnic being held this after noon. Special trains are in from all directions. Sir Alen Aylesworth and Hugh Guthrie, K.C., will speak for the government and T. W. Crothers, K.C., and T. W. McGarry, M.P.P., for the opposition.

LABOUR DAY PROGRAMME LOOKS LIKE BEST YET

The Labour Day sports, under the auspices of the Trades and Labour Council will be the attraction on the holiday. They have a first-class programme of athletic sports, and judging from the way the entries are coming in, it looks like "some doings" at Riverside Park on Labour Day. There were a lot of entries turned in on Saturday, some from out of town and many of the local athletes will avail themselves of the opportunity of trying their skill with the men from the farm.

The tug-of-war between different teams of the city will furnish some excitement, as there are some dark horses in the tug-of-war. The quoit throwers are busy these days getting in some additional practise for the Labour Day Tournament, and Chief Howard's men will need to see to it that they do not lose their reputation as quoiters. Altogether it looks like a big day for everybody. The ball game alone will be worth going a long way to see, and the local boys are just about due to wreck the reputation of the Belleville Railroaders next time out.

A DARING WAGER.

The Liberty Major Vaksel Took With the Eccentric Czar, Paul I.

Paul I., the eccentric Czar of Russia, assassinated in 1801, was very particular as to his dress and considered trifling matters as of supreme importance. This peculiarity was once taken advantage of by an officer of the guards, Major Vaksel, to win a wager. The major, the joker of the army, had bet several hundred rubles that he would tweak the tail of the emperor's wig on parade.

The next day, the story runs, the emperor happened to be present at early parade and, as chance would have it, took position for a moment immediately in front of the daring major. Breathless with excitement and terror, Vaksel's companions behold that rash officer's right hand steal slowly from his side, rise to the level of the Czar's neck and give the wig's hanging tail a most decided tweak.

In an instant the emperor's face, pale with fury, was turned upon Vaksel's countenance, which, however, reflected only an expression of childlike innocence, mingled with the most deferential astonishment.

"Who dared do that?" demanded the enraged Czar, his eyes flashing evidence that his most dangerous mood was upon him.

"I did, your majesty," said Vaksel, who, however his heart may have fluttered, managed to preserve outwardly unruffled calm, together with an expression of innocent surprise. "It was crooked, your majesty," he added in a confidential undertone, "and I straightened it for fear the younger officers should see it."

Paul's countenance cleared at once. He staredly fixedly, however at Vaksel's innocent-looking face for some seconds. Vaksel admitted afterward that this was the trying moment, but he had said to himself, "If I waver I am lost!" Then the Czar spoke, and spoke so that all might hear:

"I thank you, colonel!"

If ever a step in rank was gained by purest effrontery it was so acquired on this occasion, and Vaksel left the field not only promoted to a coveted position in the guards, but richer by many hundred rubles as the result of the wager.

Authoress at Thirteen.
A thirteen-year-old girl, Ada Archer, has written a 13,000-word novelette, and recently she confided some of her ambitions to a reporter.

"I want to have a really good education, read all the best books, travel round the world, write romances, and make sufficient money so that poor mother will not have to work so hard."

She is the eldest of eight children, and is her mother's right hand. School and household duties keep her busy the greater part of the day, but when the children are put to bed, and after she has finished "helping mother," she weaves romances into halfpenny exercise books, and evolves wonderful plots in which poor girls marry rich earls and live in a world where all is happiness and beauty.

Her novelette was handed to a well-known publisher's reader, who spoke of it in highly complimentary terms.

"She's a regular bookworm," remarked the child's mother proudly. "If she goes to wash a cup or make a bed, sure enough there's a book under her arm. And sometimes she breaks off in the middle of making pea-soup or scrubbing a floor, and says, 'Oh, I've got a lovely idea!' And I get so interested myself that I have to stop work and listen."

Ancient Urn Found.
The adventure of two boys has resulted in the discovery, near Brighton, of a fine specimen of an ancient British burial urn. On the cliffs to the east of Brighton there have recently been heavy landslips. A boy, who crawled to the edge of the cliff to look over, saw the mouth of an urn projecting from the newly-exposed face of the cliff. Another boy clung to his heels, and he hung over the edge of the cliff 80 feet above the water, dug out the urn and brought it up uninjured. The urn, which has been secured by the museum authorities, is pronounced to be a rare specimen, showing remarkable features of design and ornament. It contained the bones of a British chieftain, who must have been cremated and buried about the time of Caesar's first visit to Britain.

The Louis Styles.
It was the French King Louis XI. who invented gold lace, and it was Louis XIV. who ordered all the silk upholsteries of the palace done in white with figures of gold and blue and a touch of red. The louisine silks are named after him, and all the French kings of the name of Louis have had their names brought down to posterity through the invention of some article of dress, whether it be a Louis Quinze heel or a Louis Seize coat, while to Louis Quatorze belongs the honor of a cuff and a hat.

Appearances Not Always Reliable.
Two Irishmen were digging a ditch when the priest passed along.

"Moik," said one of the men, "I'd loike to have that mon's job."

"All right," said the priest, who had heard the remark. "Give me your shovel, Pat, and you go where I was going."

"Where was your riverence goin'?" asked Pat.

"On the hill yonder to see a man who has the smallpox," replied the priest.

"I'll stick to me shevel," said Pat.

Sheepskin.
Sheepskin was used as parchment before the invention of paper. Even then it was a substitute for vellum, which is made from calfskin and of a far finer quality than parchment, and was employed for fine illuminated work. Tanned sheepskins are in the trade called basils. For these there are many legitimate uses, but it is for imitation purposes that the sheepskin is most largely used.

Tea parties brewed in Boston brine
Are no more to their notion,

Their very sweetest smiles they play,

It is a goodly potion.

We're much inclined to think it true,
The cup they mean to drink of too
Is surely not a deadly brew,
Set up for our temptation.
Suppose we try a perfect blend,
Where Animosi-tea shall end,
And Ami-tea with Loyal-tea
Be served to each great nation.

To use at this Tea party.

May both pour benefits if he Shall help make Reciproci-tea.

THE OLD-TIME LOVER.

Would Women To-day Stand For His Brutal Method of Wooing.

In the present day of law and order, says a writer, there is a rumor that women love the strong in man; that they love to be fought for and dragged away. Whether it is woman or man who keeps alive the rumor, who sings the song of Man, the Masterful, no one knows.

The annals of the old life, Roman and Teuton and Goth and Hun and Frank, are full of the lover, fierce and terrible. He came, he saw the lady beautiful, he drew his sword and carried her away. If any was so bold as to say him no he smote the varlet with the sword and split him to the waist. He was a lover in truth who would not be denied.

And what of the woman? Did she cry and sigh and die? Not that history discerns. She was a lady loved; he carried her away and she gloried in his strength and brutal power. The more the tribute to her charms that she had tamed the beast.

Man was the master then. He rode far and wide, his tribesmen at his back, seeking the woman who should be his bride. As he rode what a thrill must have touched a world of women as it watched his riding! As he paused how these drew back into the shadows or forward into the light! Somewhere among them was one that he would choose. When one was it to be? On which would his terrible eye fall in approval? Upon which would he descend with a sudden plunging charger and seize and lift and carry far away?

With riper years the world gained law, and commerce came to sophisticate the loves of men. The bride was gained by purchase. Hence comes the wedding ring. It is the symbol of the purchase bond of older days. Brides are still bought in the civilised world to-day, but not in the words of commerce. A few hundred years ago the price was named out and out and paid. Among the early Teutonic peoples marriage was a private transaction. The bride's father or her brother sold her as do the savages of to-day in Africa and the world's dark corners. In America and the bright spots of civilization the purchase still goes on, but the form is changed. Of old times the husband bought the bride; to-day the bride's father buys the husband.

NO DANGER OF THE QUAKER OATS COMPANY PLANT CLOSING DOWN

From the Standpoint of the Peterborough Business the Company Favours Reciprocity---This is Confirmed Emphatically in Telegram From Mr. Robt. Stuart, Head of the Concern---Flat Denial to the Effect that Fact Would Paralyse the Peterborough Branch of Company

The Toronto Star last night contained the following:

The statement has been made by anti-reciprocity advocates that the adoption of the agreement would result in the closing down at Peterborough of the plant of the Quaker Oats Company, an important industry employing some eight hundred men. This statement was repeated as recently as Friday last when, at Mr. Borden's meeting, as reported by the Toronto papers, it was emphatically stated that Mr. Kendry, a prominent Peterborough Conservative, had stated that the plant would be closed. The Star wired Mr. Robert Stuart, the head of the Quaker Oats Company, for information as to the company's plans in this connection, and in reply received from him to-day the following telegram, dated from Charlevoix, Michigan:

"Message received. From Peterborough plant standpoint we are in favour of reciprocity."

(Signed.) ROBERT STUART.

The Peterborough plant is the only plant in Canada of the Quaker Oats Company. From the foregoing it will be seen that another anti-reciprocity canard has been nailed. Neither this nor any other industry established or projected will be checked or injured by reciprocity.

SAYS GERMANY IS PUTTING UP BLUFF

Special to The Examiner

NEW YORK, N.Y., AUG. 31.—A Berlin cable to the New York Times says that Germany is just putting up a gigantic bluff regarding the Moroccan situation. Neither the condition of her fighting forces nor her financial resources at present would permit the Kaiser's Empire to engage in a costly conflict at the present time. This information was gleaned by a man who has the ear of German's best financial men. In the meantime every nation in Europe is practically ready for eventualities, which may ensue within a few days, as Germany's reply to France's ultimatum is about due. It is acknowledged by the United States agents in Britain, that the English Government is as well prepared as any nation interested for anything that may happen.

ENGLAND'S FUEL RUNNING LOW

LONDON, AUG. 31.—In less than two centuries, unless some methods of conservation are found England will be denuded of all coal, wood and oil deposits, and will be practically bankrupt for fuel for heating and motive power. With this warning given by Sir William Ramsay, eminent scientist, a member of the British Association this morning passed a strongly worded resolution, demanding that the Government take immediate steps towards saving these natural resources to the life of England.

ENTRIES POURING IN FOR LABOUR DAY SPORTS SOME GREAT RACES

The entries for the Labour Day sports are pouring in every day, and if they continue to come for the next few days, it certainly will be a large one.

The feature event, outside of the ball game, will be the quarter-mile race, everybody is talking about it, and the men that are running in this event are certainly covering the ground in recent trials, Harold Smith, Joe Mahoney, W. Willis, Hy. Wood, Harold Hill, Wortley fo Enniskmore, Pritchard of Belleville. Any of the above-named men can beat 56 seconds for the quarter, and this event promises to be a dandy.

The five-mile event is well filled already, and it is encouraging to see the way the outsiders are coming in for these events. It would not be surprising to see some outsiders carry off the bulk of the prizes; Belleville will have Pritchard, their best sprinter, along with McCreary and Alexander, for the mile and five-mile events, and these men will certainly put up some contest in their respective events.

It is needless to say anything about the ball game, or base running contest, for it is a foregone conclusion that the Quinlanites have the railroaders, "Goat" for Labour Day, and the fans will have a good, happy and joyful time watching the railroaders wrecked.

TWO NEW LETTER BOXES PLACED IN THE CITY

Mr. Stratton has had a letter box placed at the corner of Thoas and Gilmour streets, and it is being served for the first time, to-day.

Richard Hall & Son's Popular Four Hour Bargains To-day

The only dry goods store keeping the last Thursday half-holiday was Messrs. Richard Hall & Sons, Limited. This firm had advertised to close every Thursday afternoon during July and August, and in order to keep faith with the general public they closed their store to-day at 12 o'clock, as usual. There have been a great many people looking for the four-hour bargains at Richard Hall & Sons, every Thursday, and of course, people naturally expected to share in similar benefits, to-day.

OTTAWA, ONT., AUG. 31.—As the campaign progresses, the Liberal prospects in Ottawa district improve daily. Ottawa city is sure to elect McGiverin and Pinard by over 400 and perhaps 600. "Peterborough Presents Possibilities Unparalleled."

THURSDAY, AUG. 31, 1911

TO-NIGHT'S MEETING.

Graham and Guthrie will be the visiting speakers at the mass meeting in Mr. Stratton's interests at the Opera House to-night—Hon. G. P. Graham, Minister of Railways and Canals and Mr. Hugh Guthrie, K.C., putative successor—in fact as in ability—of Sir Alan Aylsworth, Minister of Justice. Mr. Graham will lead the attack on the enemy, and Mr. Guthrie will bring up the reserves — from Keene—to complete the rout and pursue the flying enemy. Mr. Hall, chairman, and Mr. Stratton, the candidate, will also briefly address the gathering.

HOW A FARMER FEELS.

East Peterborough is almost exclusively an agricultural riding, and it is not, therefore, surprising that many farmers are disappointed in the manner in which Mr. Sexsmith, by his opposition to the reciprocity agreement, betrays the best interests of his constituents. Although his old leader, Sir John A. Macdonald, tried time and time again to obtain a measure of reciprocity with the United States in natural products, Mr. Sexsmith, in order to meet the political necessities of Mr. Borden, came out flat-footed against the present proposed agreement. There is no doubt that in his heart, Mr. Sexsmith felt just the same as one of his Belmont constituents. The Belmont farmer in question, had attended Mr. Kerr's meeting at Havelock on Saturday night last and after the meeting he chanced to meet the Liberal candidate.

"I am certainly in favour of reciprocity," said the Belmont farmer, who, it might be mentioned, is a Conservative, "and I would like to vote for it, but you know I don't like the idea of voting "Grit."

Mr. Kerr very appropriately pointed out that Mr. Sexsmith had placed him in that unfortunate position. There was offered a chance for him to obtain reciprocity without having to vote Liberal, if he had any personal objection on that score, but Mr. Borden and Mr. Sexsmith had deprived him of it. They insisted that the matter should be decided by the people. Now he could vote for reciprocity and get it. At the next election, if he still felt that he could not vote for a "Grit" candidate, he could vote accordingly.

The Belmont farmer went home determined to give his vote on September 21st for Mr. Kerr and larger markets.

WILL HELP CONSUMER.

Another prominent Conservative has taken the platform in support of reciprocity in natural products with the United States. Mr. Fred B. Lovekin, an expresident of the Conservative Association of Durham, appeared on the same platform with Mr. T. A. Kelly, Liberal Candidate for Durham, on Tuesday night, and told the electors of Darlington Township why he was obliged to break away from his party in the present campaign, and support the policy of his old leader, Sir John A. Macdonald—the policy of both political parties in Canada for the past forty years.

Mr. Lovekin made a splendid address. He does not pretend to be an orator, but he has the facts on the reciprocity question in his head, and any interruptions in the form of questions from his hearers only went to prove still more conclusively that he knew what he was talking about.

Mr. Lovesick made short work of the egg argument against reciprocity, as used by Mr. Sexsmith, in East Peterborough. Mr. Sexsmith has expressed great alarm over the fact that Canada imports some eggs from the United States during the winter months—at a time of the year when the Canadian hens are not laying. Mr. Lovekin expressed his view on this in a very appropriate manner. A report of the meeting says:

"In reply to questions, Mr. Lovekin discussed the egg market, asking if the men who sat up all night with the thermometer at 20 below zero, to rub the hens' stomachs with hot bricks to get a dozen eggs to sell for half a dollar, was really going to lose much if the consumer was given a chance to get fresh eggs from the Southern States in the winter instead of limed eggs, which had been in storage for a year."

This is one of the many instances where the consumer will be benefitted by reciprocity and the producer will in no way be injured.

THE HIGHER MARKET.

Here is what Congressman Helgeson, of North Dakota, says, in objecting to giving Canadian farmers the American market:

"I live in the State of North Dakota. Up there we have a town where half of the town is in North Dakota and the other half in Saskatchewan. One of the principal streets forms the boundary line. How do you account for the fact that the millers have been paying from 10 to 12 cents a bushel more for wheat, and the maltsters have been paying from 10 to 25 or 30 cents more for barley, and the merchants have been paying from 20 to 25 cents more for flax on the American side of that street than on the Canadian side? If the Liverpool market or the markets of the world control the price, how do you account for that fact?"

So the United States market is undoubtedly higher, and the Canadian farmer is the man who can capture it.

We have other proof besides that of the United States Congressman.

The Ontario harvest is practically over, but the supply of grain coming into Toronto market is phenomenally small. Why? It is because the farmer is holding back his supply in hope of the better prices which will be afforded by the larger market under reciprocity. Instead of marketing his grain, he is getting his plowing done, and preparing his land for fall wheat. Do the Bordenites think that the farmer will hold his grain for higher prices and vote against the candidates of a government that is getting them for him, is a reality.

The bulletin of comparative prices printed by order of the Canadian Parliament shows that the farmer is right in expecting a better figure for his grain when the new markets are open to him. From this authority the following average prices are compiled, the 1911 average being for the first six months:

Winter wheat—

	1908	1909	1910	1911
Toronto	$0.90	$1.08	$0.98	$0.84
Detroit	0.98	1.31	1.09	0.91

Oats—

	1908	1909	1910	1911
Toronto	$0.44	$0.45	$0.36	$0.34
Buffalo	0.56	0.53	0.44	0.36

Barley—

	1908	1909	1910	1911
Toronto	$0.61	$0.59	$0.54	$0.63
Buffalo	0.79	0.68	0.74	1.00

Rye—

	1908	1909	1910	1911
Toronto	$0.80	$0.71	$0.67	$0.68
Buffalo	0.81	0.83	0.81	0.87

Is it any wonder that the farmers of Ontario are holding back their grain until after the reciprocity agreement comes into force?

WILL NOT HURT THE MANUFACTURER.

The reciprocity agreement will not hurt the manufacturer, or working man, but help both, through the prosperity and increased purchasing power it will give the farmer, enabling him to buy more of the products of manufacturers.

Misleading statements—in plain words, straight lying—form a large share of the arguments of the opponents of reciprocity.

Even the Review falsifies the record by asking workingmen how they would like free trade in manufactured products. The agreement does not affect the manufacturer or the working man, for it provides for no reduction in duty on manufactured articles, except a slight reduction in regard to some farm implements. It only gives free trade in natural products—such as farm products.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier declared in Parliament: "We have not hurt the manufacturer and will not hurt him." He may be counted on to keep this pledge, for he and his government have made the manufacturer and workmen prosperous.

Every manufacturer and workman who is old enough will remember that when the Conservatives were in power, before 1896, industry—even with a stiff protective tariff that did not protect—was half dead; factories working half-time and workmen drawing half pay on a low scale of wages.

The Liberal Government recast the tariff and took off, or greatly lowered the duty on raw material imported for the manufacturers' use.

Th result was a big boon in prosperity for the manufacturer and the working man.

To show how the Liberal Government's policy caused this great change from stagnation to booming activity; from low wages and half-time to higher wages and full time is easy.

Every year the manufacturers of Canada import 100 million dollars' worth of raw material from the United States duty-free. In the industrial competition that prevails every little cents and the difference was enough to make all the difference between profit and loss; between dullness and activity.

Does any working man or manufacturer for a moment think that the Government would undo its work by proposing anything to injure the industries they have helped build up?

Is it not reasonable that if the manufacturer is benefitted by importing raw material free from the United States, it will help the farmer to have a free entry of his products to the same market?

Isn't it fair play that the farmer should have an even chance with the manufacturer, who, in addition to the great advantage of free raw materials from the United States, is protected by a high tariff against manufactured articles from the same country?

The farmer is not asking for protection from competition — he courts competition; he wants free access for better goods to a bigger market of higher prices. He does not fear competition; he seeks it. He asks protection—not by the help of high tariff, but by removal of tariff.

Then why should not manufacturer and workingman vote to give him an even chance?

OUT OF THEIR OWN MOUTHS.

The reciprocity agreement now before the country is a purely economic —a purely business—question. There is no politics in it except what has been intruded by politicians for purely party ends. When the agreement was first introduced the Conservative members if parliament thought it was too good to be true—that the Canadian negotiators had made so good a bargain. The Conservative press took the same tone; but the monopolistic and financial and highly protected "interests" put the pistol to Mr. Borden's head and he had to surrender and oppose reciprocity against his own honest convictions, and those of his followers.

To his credit, he did it with a wry face. His leading supporters were not so scrupulous. There was a row in the Conservative camp and the wing of his followers who thought he did not yield readily enough ot the policy of converting reciprocity into a party expedient, demanded his resignation as leader. This accounted for the row over the leadership of the Conservative party at the last session of parliament; and a business matter like the agreement was made a party question.

This makes it awkward for the gentlemen who are now opposed, out and out, to the agreement, to have their praise of reciprocity as embalmed in Hansard quote against them.

It would be interesting to quote one of these. What do farmers think of the following tribute to the good effects of reciprocity, spoken in Parliament by Mr. Wilcox, the Conservative member, and now the Conservative candidate, for North Essex, and the deadly foe of what he formerly advocated. He said:

"I believe that it is unfair that I, as a representative farmer in the riding of North Essex, growing hay and horses and cattle, must pay a higher duty if I wish to take my products into the United States than the American farmer has to pay to bring his products into Canada. The American farmer can bring his hay into Canada at $2 a ton, but I have to pay $4 a ton to get mine into the American market. I believe that is not a proper condition of things. Another instance of the same unfair condition is the duty on eggs, on which I have to pay a duty of 6 cents a dozen, against the American farmer's 3 cents a dozen."

The reciprocity agreement removes Mr. Wilcox's grievance, but he thinks more of his party than of his farmer constituents, and now denounces what he believes gives them not only benefit, but justice and fair play. The present reciprocity agreement brings the United States and Canadian tariffs on natural products on a common level—wipes out both completely—and, by banishing the discrimination against the Canadian farmer, opens to him a large and profitable market.

Hide-bound partyism is a poor tool to use in bringing prosperity and building up a nation.

Out of their own mouths the representative opponents of the agreement are convicted. There are scores of similar statements, such as that of Mr. Wilcox, that can be quoted against the double play they have made on this question.

IN ENGLISH QUEBEC.

Mr. Borden Speaks at Bedford and Granby.

Bedford, Que., Aug. 31.—Greeted at the station by Mayor N. A. Pare, who read and presented an address of welcome to the Conservative chieftain, and followed from the station to his hotel by a crowd of people who had been attending the Missisquoi Fair, R. L. Borden and his lieutenants yesterday invaded this town to commence their tour of the Eastern Townships.

Dr. Pickel, the Conservative candidate, declared that if the United States got one foot into our fiscal system they would soon have four feet in it so firmly that they could not be dislodged.

Mr. Borden in opening declared that his recent tours had shown him that Ontario and the West intended to maintain the British connection. He knew that Quebec would do likewise.

"This reciprocity pact is the greatest menace to that connection that has ever dawned on our horison," said Mr. Borden. "But if I judge aright," he continued, "the dark cloud, together with the evil genii of the Liberal party, will be dispelled on September 21."

At Granby.

Granby, Que., Aug. 31.—One thousand residents of this district stood in the Town Hall last night for two hours and a half and listened to R. L Borden and his lieutenants. All the speakers were given a good hearing.

Canadians Are First.

London, Aug. 31.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—The artillery contests yesterday resulted in a handsome victory for the Canadian team, commanded by Capt. Harris of Victoria. Five companies were entered in addition to the Canadian garrison, namely, the 1st Sussex, North Scottish, East Riding, Glamorgan and Dorsetshire. Firing took place at a moving target towed across the sea at a range from 4,000 to 5,000 yards in front of the battery, at a speed of about eight to ten knots. The Canadians won the Prince of Wales' prize with a figure of merit of 968. Second prize went to the Sussex company with 715. The North Scottishmen were credited a figure of merit of 542, giving them third position, East Riding 500, Glamorgan received no marks.

The weather on the whole was favorable to firing and showed an improvement upon that in a similar contest last year, but, excepting that of the Canadians, was only of average merit. The event concludes the principal competitions

Women Get Prices Down.

Paris, Aug. 31.—The agitation against the high prices of provisions continues and disorders of considerable proportions were reported yesterday from twelve places in northern France.

The usual procedure is for a crowd of women of the lower class to assemble and do their marketing together, carrying large placards upon which are written the prices which the women are willing to pay.

If the shopkeeper assents to sell his goods at the price offered, the women buy; but if he refuses they pitch all of his stock into the street.

The man next door generally yields, though the crowd in its excitement may sack the place out of spite without enquiring whether the dealer is willing to reduce the price of his goods.

Fired Sub Fire Chief.

Montreal, Aug. 31.—Sub Fire Chief Martin was officially suspended by the Board of Control yesterday, after an investigation lasting over an hour. An investigation into the charges against Martin will be held next Wednesday at 3 o'clock.

Martin incurred the wrath of Chief Tremblay for an alleged interview given to La Patrie, in which he protested against the system of hirings firemen. He is alleged to have said that bookkeepers and clerks were given positions as firemen in preference to practical men who could handle horses and put out fires, even though their book knowledge was not so extensive.

Hen Gets Two Years.

Chatham, Aug. 31.—Edward Hen, alias Fatty Rowe, was sentenced to two years in Kingston Penitentiary by Judge Dowlin yesterday, on a charge of burglarizing the house of a man named McCugan at Kent Centre. Hen is the man who attacked Constable Peters with a sledge hammer when he went to arrest him.

Wm. Baby, jr., was fined $5 and costs for each offence, on being found guilty of allowing two minors in his poolroom, by Squire Merritt.

E. A. McCrery of Louisville was arrested yesterday on a charge of indecent assault preferred against him by his sister-in-law, Mrs. Weaver

May Not Be Guthrie.

Ottawa, Aug. 31.—The Journal, Independent, yesterday, said: "It is learned that the vacant portfolio of Justice has been promised to Mr. A. H. Clarke of South Essex, and not to Mr. Hugh Guthrie, as has been said. It is probable that the mention of Mr. Guthrie has been made in order to help him in his election."

Cotton Mills Close Down.

Warwick, R.I., Aug. 31.—The Warwick Cotton Mills of the B. B. and R. Knight Co. at Centredale, closed last night, for a week. The mill employs 650 operatives. A majority of the mills of the company in this state, Massachusetts and Connecticut, have been running on three-quarters' time for several weeks.

ELLIOT'S

POINT FOR PRISONER

Witness in Beattie Murder Trial Testifies to Having Seen Two Blood Spots on the Road

PROSECUTION SURPRISED

CHESTERFIELD COURT HOUSE, VA., AUG. 30.—An auburn-hair boy revealed on the witness stand yesterday, to the surprise of both defence and prosecution in the trial of Henry Clay Beattie, jr., for wife murder, that he had observed several blood spots along Midlothian turnpike where the crime occurred. This was the first intimation that any blood-spot except one, near the place at which Mrs. Beattie is supposed to have succumbed, existed.

Alexander Robertson was the boy, and what he told the jury unexpectedly, in response to a question for the defence, entirely upset the plan of the commonwealth to rest its case to-day. Prosecutor Wendenburg announced that it would be necessary for him now to call at least seven or eight witnesses to controvert the boy's testimony.

On direct examination by Prosecutor Wendenburg, seking to show where the boy found a hairpin similar to those worn by Mrs. Beattie, Robertson referred to its distance from "the first blood spot."

"Were there two blood spots?" asked H. M. Smith, jr., counsel for the defense, in surprise, and the boy not only told of a second blood spot, but of several other smaller spots near it.

Hasty preparations were made over night by the commonwealth to combat to-day the testimony given by fifteen-year-old Alexander Robertson yesterday that he had seen on the Midlothian turnpike blood spots other than the pool of blood where Mrs. Henry C. Beattie, junior, is alleged to have ben killed by her husband.

The significance of the lad's declarations is that if it should be proven that there were many blood spots on the road, it would support the contention of the defence that the first pool of blood dripped from the machine from the bleeding woman, who was alleged by Beattie to have been shot while in the front seat. On the other hand the prosecution wished to show that there was but one blood spot, that no blood could have oozed from the machine and that the large pool resulted from the shooting of Mrs. Beattie while she was standing either on the running board or in the road. Thus the commonwealth had intended to puncture the original explanation of the crime made by the prisoner.

Detective Scherer, who has been most active in working up the case for the prosecution, was selected by the commonwealth to refute to-day the testimony of young Robertson. Scherer was expected to tell of how in company with many others he had looked for blood spots at daybreak after the murder, and how, after a continuous long search only the one blood spot was found.

After these witnesses the prosecution intended to rest its case to-day.

The line of argument to be taken up by the defence in the trial was expected to be revealed to-day from the testimony of its first few witnesses. It was expected that an effort would be made to attack the veracity of Paul D. Beattie, to reduce the effect of his testimony concerning an alleged confession by Henry C. Beattie, Jr., to him about the murder. That Paul had been discharged from certain positions, the reason therefor, and other incidents in his life were to be testified to by witnesses for the defence, but the most important attack upon him is expected when the prisoner himself takes the stand.

Court convened at 10.30 o'clock, and Harry M. Smith, Jr., counsel for the defence, suggested that during the wait for Mr. Wendeburg, of the prosecution, a canvas should be made of the several witnesses for the defence present so that absentees might be brought to the court house.

Many witnesses for the defence were excused by Mr. Smith, as he said "Certain phases of the case anticipated had not been touched upon by the prosecution."

The prosecuting attorney reached the court house at 10.40 o'clock, after an uncomfortable experience with the muddy roads.

The prosecution rested its case at noon against Harry C. Beattie, Jr., under indictment for the murder of his wife, and the defence began the introduction of its witnesses.

Before any witnesses for the defence were summoned, court recessed for a few minutes to permit the defendant's counsel to argue a point with Judge Watson, in the absence of the jury, concerning the striking out of certain evidence introduced by the prosecution.

To-day the prosecution produced fourteen witnesses, mostly county detectives, to controvert the testimony of young Alexander Robertson as to the presence of more than one blood spot on the Midlothian turnpike, where Mrs. Beattie was killed.

It was a detail of the case, but by concentrating the attention on the single large spot of blood, the commonwealth intended to show that the woman was murdered in a different manner from that described by the husband.

The defence announced early in the day that it would call Paul Beattie to the stand again.

Spring Humors

Result From the Poisoned Condition of the Blood

Discharge Is Checked—Sores Are Cleaned Out and Healed by

Dr. Chase's Ointment

Aside from the suffering caused by pimples, sores and skin eruptions, there is the annoyance and embarrassment to which they give rise, particularly when on the hands or face.

It is quite proper to try to get the blood right by use of internal treatment, but this is a tedious method of overcoming the skin troubles, which can so readily be gotten rid of by using Dr. Chase's Ointment.

The three pricipal ingredients of this great, soothing, healing ointment are the most potent known to the medical profession as a means of cleaning out sores and ulcers, destroying morbid growth, lessening the discharge, preventing blood-poisoning and stimulating the healing process.

Dr. Chase's Ointment stops itching almost as soon as applied and often heals almost like magic.

The time required for cure depends on the nature of the ailment, but, unlike internal treatment, the benefits are apparent to the eye, and you can note from day to day the improvement made.

The wonderful success of Dr. Chase's Ointment in the cure of eczema, salt rheum, psoriasis and old sores and wounds is sufficient proof that it is bound to be satisfactory in the treatment of less severe diseases of the skin. 60 cents a box, at all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto. A SERIOUS OFFENCE

The librarian of the Public Library has asked The Examiner to call the attention of the public to the fact that the cutting of magazines and periodicals in the library is a serious offence and that the offenders will be punished. The trouble is all in the ladies' side of the reading room where people have been cutting patterns and stories out of the periodicals. The authorities have an inkling as to the identity of the offenders and will take steps to punish the guilty parties if the practise is adhered to.

THE EVENING CHIT-CHAT

By Ruth Cameron

The correctness with which a man pronounces," an old college professor used to tell all his classes, "is the hall mark of his culture and education."

How do you think you would stand according to that criterion?

It seems to me that very few people would be 100 point folks by that test.

Perhaps you think my remarks are unduly sweeping and unnecessarily harsh. Perhaps you think that you, for instance, do not very often make a mistake in your pronunciation.

Now before you pat yourself on the back, my friend, let me ask you how you pronounce a few words like address, inquiry, alias, interesting, aspirant, grievous, harass, illustrate, precedence, resource.

Look up your pronunciation of these words in the dictionary and if you have them all right I humbly beg your pardon. But I'll wager I won't have to.

Of course, the common words which could hardly be pronounced in more than one way most of us get right. Only children and distinctly ignorant people make errors in these. But there are many words which are commonly pronounced two or three ways and yet which should properly be pronounced only one way.

When a man pronounces all these words properly he certainly can find his window in the Hall of Culture.

But how few people do.

Of course, it would be almost impossible to sit down and corral these words all at once and learn to pronounce them aright.

But one can make an effort to notice different pronunciations in the course of conversation and then hunt out the right one and make it one's own.

That's the hardest way, but, like most hardest ways, it's the only sure one.

It isn't safe to adopt a pronunciation because you hear someone you think is well educated using it. Many people who ought to know better cling firmly to faulty pronunciations.

Nor is it safe to adopt a pronunciation because it sounds "high-brow." You are very apt to get caught this way. For instance, I think "in'quiry" sounds most "college-professory," but as a matter of fact "inquir'y" has the weight of authority. And again, "pre'cedence" certainly sounds punctiliously correct, but "preced'ences" really is the right pronunciation.

If you care to hunt down some of these words I think you will find the chase rather interesting.

Of course there's the drawback that even if you do learn to pronounce correctly ninety-nine-one hundredths of the people who hear you won't know you are doing so.

But cheer up. Think how the other hundredth will appreciate such a rarity.

Besides, you know, knowledge as well as virtue, is, or surely ought to be, its own reward.

A COURTEOUS APPEAL

BERLIN, AUG. 26.—Herr von Jagow, the Police President, has issued a courteus appeal to the women inhabitants of the city requesting them not to wear dangerously long hatpins in their hats without covering the points with protecting sheaths.

This appeal was the result of several serious accidents resulting from women wearing long hatpins in crowded tramway cars, railway carriages, and other public places.

In one case a man had his eye torn out of its socket by the projecting point of a hatpin worn by a woman sitting next to him.

The Police President's appeal, however, does not appear to have met with the desired compliance, and several more or less serious hatpin accidents have recently happened.

Herr von Jagow has now proceeded to stronger measures, and a new police edict makes a woman whose unprotected hatpin inflicts a wound on another person liable to a fine of $220, to a term of imprisonment not exceeding two years, in addition to which the injured party may claim damages up to $1,500.

PETERBOROUGH SCOUTS WERE GIVEN PLACE OF HONOUR AT TORONTO EXHIBITION

Interesting Account of What Transpired During Their Three Days Sojourn in the Queen City---5,000 Scouts Were Reviewed by Earl Grey.

The Peterborough Scouts, about 65 in number, in splendid health and spirits, returned from their three days' camp at Toronto Exhibition last night. They were under command of Assistant Scout Master Frank Scout Master Wood, Miller, and Scout Master Rev. F. J. Sawers.

To the Peterborough Scouts there was given the honour of being the first troop in the third division. Tuesday was the first day: 5.45, bugle for rising; 6, wash parade; 6.30 parade for prayers. The troops drawn up in a square, the clerical Scout Masters, about ten in number, occupying the centre; 7.30, breakfast: 8, march out as a practice for the afternoon. 1, dinner; 2.30, parade to the grand stand, where the Scouts were reviewed by his Excellency Earl Grey, Chief Scout of Canada.

A most impressive sight was presented before the grandstand, when 5,000 scouts were lined up, column after column, the standard bearers stepping the centre in a long line with 100 large Union Jacks fluttering in the breeze, and when cheers burst forth from thousands of throats and hats were waved at the top of voices, it was a scene long to be remembered.

The troops then marched past the grandstand in review order to the music of the Grenadiers' Band, and delighted, by their smart appearance, the vast assembly. After the march past various Scout troops put on a display of Scout work, first aid, signalling, parade fire lighting, bridge building, etc. Peterborough Troop No. 3 took part in this, giving an exhibition of first aid, for which they were complimented by Earl Grey himself.

At this stage Lady Grey was presented with a beautiful bouquet by Gordon Burland of Grimsby.

After tea the Scouts occupied seats in the grenstand and witnessed the performance, taking part afterwards in the Coronation procession. About 10.30 they were glad to wend their way back to the encampment, and in a marked contrast with the night before, remarkably soon silence reigned supreme.

ROUSING RECIPROCITY MEETING LAST NIGHT AT YOUNG'S POINT

The Candidate, Messrs. R. R. Hall, D. O'Connell and Other Speakers Show the Benefit of the Pact and Their Arguments Are Echoed by the Enthusiastic Audience.

"Let's go to the reciprocity meeting," said one little boy to the other, as they came out of Kearney's store at Young's Point last night. And they did.

The point is, that the little boy didn't refer to it as Mr. Stratton's meeting or Mr. Anybody Else's meeting, but as the reciprocity meeting. Even the children have grasped the idea that this is not a mere struggle between rival candidates. They understand that it is business, not politics.

Voting For One's Self.

It was following up this line of thought that Candidate Stratton said toward the end of his speech: "Forget how you have voted in days gone by. You are not voting for me or for any other man. You are voting for or against reciprocity. You have the one great chance of your life to cast a vote for yourself." It's rather a new thing in politics to see a candidate standing so much on the merits of his case, and so little on personal considerations.

The audience at Young's Point listened to reciprocity talk for three hours straight. When you remember that the average man begins to fidget under a sermon half an hour long, you will begin to understand the force of the appeal to the greatest number number one, which causes him to lend willing ears to a business proposition for that length of time.

"You have," said Mr. Stratton to Chairman Kearney, "been presiding at my meetings at Young's Point for the last twenty-five years, and I only hope that you will live to preside at meetings for twenty-five years longer." Which was a good wish, because it gave Chairman Kearney a ripe old age.

Looking Backwards.

Being in a reminiscent mood, the candidate told something about the roads and wharves and docks and dams and bridges he had helped to get built in Peterborough county. It is a long story and for human interest it lays over Kipling's Bridge Builders any day, because the farmers know just what those improvements mean in the matter of distances shortened and hard hauls made easy, and markets made convenient, that were as good as inaccessible before.

"And don't forget the 187 miles of rural mail delivery," said Mr. Stratton. "You'll value that service more and more every day. When it brings the daily paper to your door every day and lets you know what the produce markets are doing and the prices that are ruling, you'll begin to understand your privileges."

Mr. Stratton tickled the audience's risibilities when he dwelt with humour on the freak religious issues that had been used against him in former campaigns, with the idea of throwing dust in people's eyes.

"But it seems to me," and his eyes twinkled, "when I look back, that the more freakish the issue, the greater was my majority."

"This last cry—vote against reciprocity and Mr. Stratton because Laurier is a Roman Catholic—is the most freakish of the lot. What has it to do with his statesmanship that Sir Wilfrid was born and cradled in a different religion from you and me. Laurier is a patriot and a loyalist. The premier of Great Britain and his fellow premiers of the colonies have said that Laurier was Canada's grand old man. He needs no certificate of character from anybody: He has brightened Canada in the eyes of the world."

Never Too Many Markets.

Coming to reciprocity, Mr. Stratton pointed out that another market of ninety millions was not to be despised by men who raised cattle, sheep, swine and horses.

"Have you realized how many animals you have sold to the Northwest for breeding purposes? Have you ever thought what might happen to your Northwest market when they raise enough live stock to satisfy their need and begin to send the overflow down to glut the eastern market? You'd find a United States market mighty handy then, handier even than now, when you get from two to four hundred dollars more for a team of good horses in Buffalo than you can in Toronto."

The Loyalty of Cheese.

Among other commodities that Mr. Gillespie buys is cheese. Being called on for a speech, he cheerfully testified that neither he nor cheese nor butter, nor anything else that he dealt in, had anything to fear from reciprocity. On the contrary they had everything to expect from the wider market and higher prices.

"Our Canadian cheese," said Mr. Gillespie, "constitutes 75 p.c. of the British cheese market. We can do the same in the American market. Our cheese takes 95 p.c. of the prizes for quality. The Americans are willing to pay a premium for it if they can get it."

"Talking of cheese," went on Mr. Gillespie, "we import our rennet and colours free of duty from the United States. England buys our cheese and eats it with relish, and never asks whether any of its elements came from the United States. I wonder if the Burnhamites would call England disloyal because she eats Canadian cheese with Yankee rennet in it."

The Story of the Three Eggs.

After touching on the historical side of reciprocity, Mr. R. R. Hall came to one of his best illustrations—The Story of the Three Eggs. The three eggs are the Canadian egg, which has the hardy, northern, pioneering spirit which gobbles the market whenever it has a fair chance; the American egg, which, contrary to the customary national spirit, is timid and likes to stay at home; and the calm, calculating cold storage egg that gets itself bought for fifteen cents a dozen from the farmer and then waits in its slow, revengeful way, until it can get itself sold to the consumer for thirty-five cents a dozen and build up the middleman's swollen profits. What the farmer wants, and the consumer, too, is an easier interchange of fresh eggs that have not lost their innocence.

Mr. Hall went into many other aspects of the bargain. His parting shot was "Taft's need was Laurier's opportunity." Ordinarily we don't stop to ask why a blessing befalls us. We take it for granted. Well you've got to grasp this reciprocity blessing on the jump, for you may never have another chance in your lives."

When Comparisons Are Profitable.

The person who said "comparisons are odious," was no doubt a person who had got the worst of the comparison. Comparisons at election time are highly edifying. Last night Mr. Daniel O'Connell supplied the comparisons between Mr. Stratton and the other candidate.

"Mr. Stratton," said Mr. O'Connell, "has won honour by the confidence of his fellow men in many high positions in politics and business. His powers of application and his great mental activity and his splendid business talents have all contributed to increasing the prosperity of this county and the province. When he left the Provincial Secretary's department in Toronto he left behind a record, as the best business administrator that department had ever seen. And at Ottawa they will tell you that no man in Parliament looks better after the interests of his constituents. This man has grown grey in your service. Stratton is a worker.

Hopping From Hobby to Hobby.

"Who is opposing him?" asked Mr. O'Connell, turning to the other side of the picture. "A man almost too ridiculous to dwell upon. What has he done with the university education his parents provided him with? How far has he got on the road his aristocratic forefathers tried to make straight and smooth for him? Well, he became a lawyer, but nobody ever caught him working at it. Then he joined the ranks of five o'clock tea drinkers and made a hand at bridge parties. His role was that of disappointed gentleman. He took up fads, many fads. I say nothing against his Children's Aid efforts. It is a good hobby. I suppose it is natural enough for a man who has no children to want to help the children of others.

"Which reminds me," said Mr. O'Connell, "that one of the most clamorous outcries of this unmarried man is, are we married or not married."

"Mr. Burnham thought anybody could run a newspaper," Mr. O'Connell went on. "He found that Burnham couldn't. The only relic of his connection with journalism is a report of his speech at the Borden meeting in the Review; and half of that he didn't use on the platform."

"Mr. Burnham wrote one or two novels. I have yet to hear of anybody that ever read them except the proof-reader."

"From fiction," continued Mr. O'Connell, "this man turned to a sort of butterfly search for truth. He examined so many religions that he ended in thoroughly believing none. And then he got into transcendentalism and passed from our view in the clouds."

"This man," said Mr. O'Connell, "is an idler. And the devil finds mischief for idle hands to do. I charge Mr. J. H. Burnham on this platform with fomenting sectarian strife and trying to sow hatred where love should exist."

Nailing the Farmer's Bank Lie.

"What," asked Mr. O'Connell, "has Stratton got to do with the Farmer's Bank?

"Mr. Stratton is connected with banks and insurance companies and loan companies handling money that runs up to a hundred million dollars. Their business is to loan money. They lend it every day.

"To one of these strong financial companies in which Mr. Stratton is interested, came Travers and the promoters of the Farmers Bank. They wanted to borrow money, and as collateral, they presented $120,000 in good honest farmer's notes on which they were loaned $80,000."

"With this $80,000 they helped to make up the deposit of $250,000 with the government, which is required by the Banking Act. They didn't tell the Finance Minister that it was borrowed money and the department issued the charter in the usual way, all the provisions of the law having been complied with. No blame can be attached to Mr. Fielding for obeying the law regarding the issuance of bank charter, nor to Mr. Stratton's loan company for making a loan on first class security."

"Mr. Stratton couldn't tell that the funds of the bank were going to be misapplied by Travers and his pals. He couldn't tell that the Whitney government was going to be bullied into putting $35,000 of the province's money into the bank, so that $35,000 of it could be lent to Beattie Nesbitt and the other ten thousand to W. F. Maclean. He couldn't tell that Dr. Beattie Nesbitt was going to rut the bunk and get away to the United States any more than he could tell that the Ontario government was going to be so afraid of getting him back that they offered a $200 reward for a former bank president who had blown up for a couple of millions."

"Dr. Beattie Nesbitt," said Mr. O'Connell, reflectively, "weighs about 275 pounds. They are offering about 70 cents a pound for him. And that's how much they want him to come back and "tell where the money came from."

The meeting closed with the usual cheers for the King and the candidate.

PROGRESSIVE EUCHRE PARTY

A most delightful time was spent at the Belmont Club House last evening, when a progressive euchre party was held. There were about twenty-eight of the members present. The first prize, a gold-headed umbrella, given by Mr. Keith Lech, was won by Mr. Hugh Brown. The event was one of the most enjoyable of the season.

THE LAST CHANCE

The Government has thrown open for entry 25,000 homesteads in Western Canada in the Provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan. These homesteads are within 30 miles of present lines of the Canadian Northern Railway (and some much less) and all will undoubtedly be served by railway lines within a short time.

The low round trip homeseekers' fares to points in Alberta and Saskatchewan are in effect only two more days this year, September 5th and 19th. The fares are low, the return limits long and the stop-over privileges liberal.

Write at once for the latest Homeseekers' guide, fares and other particulars. The Canadian Northern Railway offers a choice of all routes, reaches nearly every part of Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba, thus enabling one to examine all sections and make a wise selection.

All particulars can be obtained by writing to R. L. Fairbairn, Asst. General Passenger Agent, Canadian Northern Railway, Toronto, Ont.

OFF FOR SCOTLAND

Mr. R. D. Dundas, of Lowlands Stock Farm on a Buying Trip

Mr. R. D. Dundas, of the Lowlands Stock Farm, Springville, leaves to-day for Scotland, sailing on the Grampian of the Allan line. This is the anniversary of Mr. Dundas' first trip to Scotland, just 25 years ago, and he will bring back a splendid string of Clydesdales like the others, which, through Mr. Dundas' enterprise, have done so much to improve the heavy horse flesh of Ontario and as a matter of fact all Canada; for his horses find their way all over the Dominion. There are thousands who will, as the Examiner does, wish Mr. Dundas a prosperous trip and a safe return.

PREPARING FOR HARVEST FESTIVAL

St. John's choir meet for practice to-night at 8 p.m. in the church. Music for the Harvest Festival will be rehearsed. To-night is the last practice but one before the Festival, so all choristers are asked to be present to study the following works:

GOOD POSITIONS

The Peterborough Business College is a worthy link in a chain of Seven Business Colleges, located in the cities of London, Peterborough, Welland, and the towns of Orangeville, Walkerton, Wingham, and Clinton. Owing to its high-grade work it is affiliated with the Commercial Educators' Association of Canada. It is freely admitted that owing to these connections, its students get the very best positions. Fall openings are on Aug. 28th, and Sept. 5th, but at this school each student is instructed privately at his or her own desk: students may enter any day. Many students study all at home, and others partly at home and finish at the College. As Spotton Colleges are the largest trainers in Canada, and have thirty years' experience, it would be well for young people to get their training there. Last year Mr. Spotton trained over 1,300 young people and placed them in good positions. What he has done for thousands of others he can do for you.

LIBRARY NOTES

Cataloguing is now in process at the public library. Under ordinary circumstances during this event, the library would be entirely closed but in order not to inconvenience the public, the Board intend that the same conditions as those of July and August shall prevail until further notice, viz.: The lending library will be opened at 2 o'clock until 8.30. The reading room will be open all day.

A WEAK HEART

When the heart is weak or irregular in action, when the blood is thin and watery, remember the blood-forming qualities of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food and by its use feed the system with rich, revitalizing blood. This is Nature's way of curing weakness and disease. It is the only way to secure lasting benefit.

Lindsay Man Killed At Toronto

LINDSAY, AUG. 30.— Joseph Teatro, of Lindsay, a labourer, who boarded at 180 Sumach street, Toronto, died at the General Hospital in that city yesterday afternoon as a result of a fracture of the skull.

Such was the information contained in a telegram which was received in Lindsay late last evening by relatives of Mr. Teatro, and the distressing news of the sad fatality will be received with deep regret by the many friends of the deceased in Lindsay.

The late Joseph Teatro, who is a native of this town, went to Toronto to work last March and was employed with the Rosedale Sawmill Company, Don Flats. According to the news item in to-day's Toronto papers Teatro was piling lumber yesterday afternoon when a pile of beams fell on him. The injury was dressed at the works after which he was removed to the hospital, where it was found that he was also suffering from internal injuries. It appears, however, that there is another version as to how the accident occurred. Mr. Frank Teatro, Lindsay, a brother of the deceased, after receiving the telegram announcing his brother's death, decided to go to Toronto and look into the affair, and about noon hour to-day a 'phone message was received from him in which he stated that the dead man was working at a saw, which was apparently not properly guarded. When cutting some blocks one was thrown forcibly by the saw, striking the deceased on the head, inflicting the fatal wound.

LINDSAY THIEF ARRESTED HERE

A man named George McGregor, wanted in Lindsay on a charge of theft, was arrested here last night by P. C. Meagher. Chief Chilton, of Lindsay, came after him this morning. McGregor at first denied his identity, but when he was searched the Chief discovered his name on the inside of his razor case. He is charged with stealing $6.00 in cash and a pair of shoes from the place where he was boarding in Lindsay on Tuesday last. He came to this city yesterday and was recognized last night from the description given. He is a man of about 40 years of age. This is another evidence of the efficiency of the local police force.

The police department yet find it necessary to warn the local business men and others that their horses must not be left untied on the streets. This is a safeguard against accidents, and the police are determined to see that the law regarding this, is strictly enforced.

CHIMES WERE RUNG IN HIS HONOUR

The People's Chimes in St. John's church, rang out a merry peal at noon to-day out of compliment to Lt.-Col. Edwards of Edmonton, as an influential citizen of Peterborough in days gone by and one who took great interest in the Chimes project. Col. Edwards left for his home in the West this afternoon, after a short stay in the city and at Stoney Lake. He is in command of the 101st Regiment at Edmonton, which he himself organized and is taking part in the public affairs of the city. Col. Edwards had a long connection with the Peterborough Rangers, commanding the 57th for three years.

POLICE UNABLE TO CONTROL MOB

Examiner Special:

NEW YORK, AUG. 31.—An emphatic protest was made this morning by police newspapers and reform organizations, regarding the Wells-Brown fight last night, when three hundred police were unable to control the mob which were unable to get in to see the fight. The danger of fire and panic was great, but under the new law the police are not permitted into Madison Square Garden, where the fight was held. It is estimated that the gate receipts amounted to fifty thousand dollars.

TRAIN DELAYED

The intending passengers for the Toronto Exhibition had a long wait this morning, the early morning C.P.R. express arriving one hour and twenty minutes late.

It is understood that the cause of the delay was that when on her way from Montreal the drawheads of one of the coaches was pulled out and a stop was necessary to replace it.

BASEBALL

The St. Thomas Daily Times says: Pitcher Quinlan of Peterborough, who came here last week to try his hand with the Saints for a few days, has returned home. Manager Elliott says Quinlan is one of the best amateur pitchers in the east, and only came up for a few days to see how he shaped up with the Canadian League. He will return here next spring to work out with the Saints and will try for a position on the 1912 team.

Interesting Article By Jack Johnson

World's Champion Heavyweight)

In my career as a boxer I have frequently noted, with the greatest surprise, that the general public seem strangely unfamiliar with the profession of boxing. That is to say, they seem wilfully to overlook the fact that, with those who take to the game seriously, boxing is just as serious a business to the fighting man as is the law to a lawyer, the stage to an actor, and so on, and so forth.

Still, there it is; even in these days, when the doings of prominent boxers are recorded very fully in the press, there would seem to be a prevalent notion that a boxer must inevitably possess something of the "brute" in his composition.

I am not exaggerating when I say that as a class, "fighting men" are the mildest individuals in the world, and in everday life would infinitely prefer to take, rather than give, blows. The days of 'hooligan' fighters are surely dead for ever, and a good thing, too, for a man need not be a rough outside the ring to be a game boxer inside.

With me, fighting has always been a simple matter of business, and nothing else. Maybe, I have sometimes met opponents whom, in private life, I should not have cared to adopt as "pets." But I have never let feelings of friendship or antipathy interfere with my tactics in the ring, for I can assure my readers that, in its own way, the scheme of a fight between two men wants a deal of planning out, for which reason the boxer who take chances, who indulge in the casual "biff-bang" style, slosh, sure-to-get-him-beaten-in-a-minute-or-two class of fighting will never last long. You can't take chances, and bring them off successfully every time. There's nothing so sure as that a miss will crop up sooner or later, and then down goes the defeated man's chance of obtaining the purse; for, as I have previously remarked, there is no room in the ring for a beaten man these days.

However, I hope I have said enough to disabuse my readers of the idea that the modern fighter, be he heavyweight, middleweight, or lightweight, is a 'hooligan,' as such men are called in England. He is nothing of the sort, and I could produce many front-rank boxers, who, were the general public unaware of their profession, would never be spotted as "knights of the mit," if twenty guesses were permitted as to the precise nature of their calling.

Public Not to Blame.

But, after all, the general public are not to blame, for the curious notions which some people entertain about boxers spring very largely from the utterly erroneous reports spread about them and their habits.

Since I have been in England I have had a whole bunch of letters from people asking me about the behind-the-scenes life of a boxer. They wonder if the life is a pleasant one. Is it really as strenuous and drastic in its self-denial as it is reported to be? Does it hurt much. Is it really a paying profession? A hundred and one questions of this kind have been put to me.

I will reply to these queries right away. In the first place, I would say that, personally, I don't find boxing a really very arduous calling. Mind you, I am always careful, and lead a steady life; but, all the same, I don't fast and starve myself to death. Neither do I follow the example of a camel, and only quench my thirst once in three days. No; stories of that kind are the merest nonsense. A boxer, of course, has to be careful of himself, but it isn't necessary for him to deny himself every luxury, so long as he does not dissipate.

By leading a steady life, and taking care of himself, he should be able to keep himself in quite good enough shape to undergo the ordeal of rigid training, which is, of course, a pretty severe ordeal. But what matter? Training doesn't last a lifetime, and a man can always have an easy time after a big match. Indeed, I think that every boxer should let himself down a trifle occasionally, otherwise he is simply bound to train stale.

Good Game for Topnotchers.

With regard to the financial side of the business, for those at the top of the tree some pretty ripe plums are awaiting in the shape of purses, music, hall engagements, and so on, and so forth. But I'd like to make it clear that a man has to climb right to the top of the ladder in the boxing world before his services will command really big purses. The public are not particularly interested in second raters, and, therefore, as I have found out myself on many an occasion in the past, to get really big money one must be right at the top of the first class.

Still, the hard work necessary to get there is well worth it. At least, so it seems to me to-day, and even now I sometimes think of those years in the past when I had no trainers, no quarters, no motor cars, and often precious little to eat.

But those times are only memories. Since those black days I have voyaged pretty well all over the world—across the world to get a chance of becoming champion—I have eaten and have drunk of the best, and have earned enough money to save, and also to see to it that the old folks at home can live in ease and plenty, and can also send my younger relations to school, so that when they grow up they won't be able to say that "when big Jack was champion of the world he never gave a thought to his poorer folk."

Should be Sure of Ability.

Thus it will be seen that boxing these days is a calling which holds quite a few good things in store for those who win their way to the top and succeed in stopping there a while. But, at the same time, I would not advise any man to take it up seriously unless he has shown ample proof of the possession of real ability, for to the moderate performer it is anything but a gold mine.

In fact, it's about as lean a calling as can be found anywhere to the bottom-raisers, for a boxer's remuneration to-day is dependent almost entirely on the influence his coming appearance exercises in the box office. If he's a drawing card, he will be paid a big salary—a real "star" salary; if he doesn't draw, he'd better save up and buy a microscope, so that his wages may at least appear larger than they really are. And, while he's about it, he'd better buy a big microscope!

For one man who wins fame in boxing, there are hundreds who fail. Various reasons can be assigned for this. Often the man who thinks he is a genius at the game is but a very ordinary boxer. Others ascend the ladder of fame a few steps, and then get "swollen head," and topple down again.

And now you've heard enough of Mistah Johnson, the first of the coloured race to be the heavyweight champion of the world, and the first also to be given a chance to fight for that proud title since the present Queensbury rules have been held to govern the fistic game.

BIG MEETING TO-NIGHT IN OPERA HOUSE

There will undoubtedly be a very large attendance at the Opera House to-night to welcome Hon. George P. Graham, Minister of Railways and Canals, and Mr. Hugh Guthrie, K. C., of Guelph, who will address a mass meeting in Mr. Stratton's interests, and who will take up the question of reciprocity fully. The people of Peterborough are fortunate in having an opportunity of hearing two such clever speakers as Messrs. Graham and Guthrie. Hon. Mr. Graham arrived this afternoon on the 4.48 C. P. R. train from Havelock, where he spoke this afternoon, while Mr. Guthrie, who addresses a meeting at Keene to-night, will motor to Peterborough immediately afterwards, in order to take part in the big meeting here.

PACKING FRUIT

From Farm and Dairy.

P. J. Carey, Dom. Fruit Inspector.

The box as a commercial package for fruit is surely, if slowly, coming into more general use. There are two principal reasons why the box is not more generally used. First, is the fact that apple handling in Ontario began with the barrel as the only package, and the whole commercial machinery, both at this end and in Europe, was fashioned for the handling of that style of package. Any change in size or style of package is a commodity so important must necessarily come slowly and in an educational way. For instance, a dealer in Montreal last season repacked apples from boxes into barrels in order to get the most out of the fruit, while in Calgary, in the box region, a dealer repacked apples from barrels into boxes, and realised one-third more for the fruit by doing so. Secondly, on account of the general neglect of Ontario orchards, the percentage of No. 1 fruit, or that suitable for boxes, has been reduced almost to a minimum — not more than 10 per cent in unsprayed orchards. But a revolution has taken place along the line of better orchard management, and this season, as it looks so far, we should have from 60 to 90 per cent of fruit suitable for boxing.

The fruit package proposition presents itself to-day as follows: The western provinces are ready to take large quantities of our apples, at least a half million boxes. The trade, at least west of Winnipeg, is demanding boxes. This, coupled with the material improvement in quality of our fruit, should give a fair opportunity of testing the merits of the box as a package. Large orders for boxes are now being placed, and I believe the number of boxes used this season will reach 100 per cent more than in any previous season.

FATTENING POULTRY

From Farm and Dairy.

D. Burch, Norfolk Co., Ont.

It will pay us farmers better to properly fatten our poultry than it will to fatten our hogs. Most of the poultry going on the market, however, is in poor condition. I have been fattening poultry for the past seven years, and wherever I have showed dressed poultry at the fairs I have always carried away all the first prizes, and last winter I succeeded in securing all of the prizes at our poultry fair—some 35 prizes.

I fatten the chickens in crates. They are kept in the crates three or four weeks. The fattening ration I use is barley, meal, low grade flour and shorts, equal parts, mixed with good buttermilk, to such a consistency that it will just pour out of a pail. We feed them three times a day for the first week, and twice a day after that. When the chickens are done eating we clean out the troughs and turn them upside down. We give them plenty of grit.

After they are properly fattened, the next thing is to dress them so that they will be in the best marketable condition. If a bird is well dressed it is half sold. Once we get our customers to know what a good chicken tastes like they seldom lose their appetite for good birds; and at very much higher prices than for the ordinary ones. We always dry pick poultry after killing by sticking them in the mouth. We never kill a bird unless it has been starved for 24 hours previously.

We are not afraid of overstocking the market. The good article will always sell. I have had best results with chickens weighing four to five pounds. I fatten about 2,000 a year, and the average gain per chicken is about two pounds. It costs less than 15c each to fatten them, less the labor.

DAIRY UTENSILS

From Farm and Dairy.

All dairy utensils should be exposed to the rays of the sun just as much as possible after being thoroughly cleaned and scalded. Sunlight is one of the best known enemies of bacteria. A rack on the south side of the dairy house, where the sun's rays strike most, is neither expensive nor unhandy.

The best way to properly cleanse the different dairy utensils is to first rinse with cold or lukewarm water and then wash with a stiff scrubbing brush in warm water, first dissolving some good washing powder. Afterwards rinse with boiling hot water and place on an incline on the "sun-bath" rack. Don't turn them upside down or the sun can't get in its work.

Cloth should not be used either in washing or wiping the different parts. If the rinse water used last is hot enough no wiping is required.

It's a poor plan to use hot water before the can is thoroughly cleaned. It should not be so hot that one can not bear one's hand in it. Hot water cooks the albumen in the milk and the result is a yellow deposit in the corners and seams.

The same rule for washing applies to all dairy utensils— cans, pails, separator parts, strainers, etc., and never use wooden ware about the dairy. It can't be kept clean. A wooden pail is all right for carrying shelled corn to the chickens, but it isn't all right for handling either milk, cream or skim milk. It is practically impossible to keep it clean.

TRAGEDY IN SHACK

Two Bodies Are Discovered in Northern Wilds—Killed Partner, Then Commits Suicide

INQUEST HELD

Winnipeg, Aug. 31.—The tragedy of a lonely shack in the far northern wilds of Western Canada is recalled in detail by the arrival in Winnipeg of a letter to Mrs. Mills, wife of Captain J. W. Mills, of the Hudson Bay Co. steamer Mackenzie River, plying between Fort McPherson and Fort Smith. The letter tells the story of a young clerk who when bringing out the mail in the spring, on June 6, found Pete Meland dead with his head crushed and W. S. Elever, the other man's prospecting partner, dead of poison, self-administered, and a confession signed by the latter, telling of the whole tragedy. The scene of the horror is Salt River, about five hundred miles north of Great Slave Lake.

The confession read as follows:

"I have been sick a long time; I am not crazy, but have simply been goaded to death. He (Meland) thought I had more money than I have, and has been trying to finish me. I tried to get him to go after some medicine, but he would not, wishing to have me die. So, good-bye.—W. S. Elever."

A further confession read as follows:—

"I have just killed the man that was killing me, so good-bye, and God bless you all. I am awfully weak and down since the last of March, so there is nothing but death for me. Cruel treatment drove me to kill Pete. Ship everything out and pay George Walker $10.—W.S."

The two bodies were buried together after the inquest, which returned a verdict of murder and suicide. A large stock of fur and the sum of $104 were found in the shack.

Three Engineers Drowned.

Port Arthur, Aug. 31.—An upturned canoe found on Lake Helen, above Lake Nepigon, following their non-arrival at Nepigon Station as expected, indicates the drowning of Division Engineer R. H. McCoy and Resident Engineers C. H. Nelson and Drum of C.N.R. construction staff. The men left camp at Exander Sunday evening for Nepigon, telephoning to Nepigon that they were departing. Their route lay across Lake Helen, between their camp and Nepigon River, and when they did not arrive search was made, resulting in the finding on Tuesday on the shores of Lake Helen of the upturned canoe and floating paddles. McCoy is 28, married, and comes from the Western States. Drum and Nelson are Americans, [illegible] residences.

At Least Fifteen Dead.

Charleston, S.C., Aug. 31.—Conditions in Charleston are fast becoming normal.

Thousands of men are at work clearing away the wreckage of the hurricane.

Revised estimates of the damage here indicate more than a million dollars.

Fifteen persons are known to have perished and it is feared that reports from the exposed sea island will swell the death lists and the property loss.

Fell From Second Storey.

Chatham, Aug. 31.—A man named Cedar, employed by Contractors Wells & Gray, at the International Harvester Works, fell from the second storey of the new factory yesterday morning and suffered critical contusions to both legs, as well as being cut and bruised from head to foot. After receiving surgical treatment he was sent to his home in Wallaceburg.

AN UNHOLY ALLIANCE

So the Premier Describes the Opposition Forces

CAUSE OF CAMPAIGN

Halifax, Aug. 31.—Halifax people turned out well last night to hear Sir Wilfrid Laurier and Hon. W. S. Fielding, and they filled the arena, which has a seating accommodation of 7,000.

Sir Wilfrid argued that the reciprocity policy of the Government was simply that of the Conservatives under their leaders of some twenty-five years ago. He could not understand the opposition of the present Conservative party.

It could not be because of the manufacturers, for the agreement must be for the benefit of the industrial classes as well as for the farmers and fishermen. He believed that the reason for the opinion was the unholy alliance between the Nationalists of Quebec and the British imperials.

"Unless I am greatly misinformed," continued Sir Wilfrid, "the reason for the present campaign was the consummation of an unholy alliance between the Quebec Nationalists and the Tory Imperialists. It was not the reciprocity question that caused them to institute their obstruction; it was the conviction of the present Tory leaders that by closing a secret and unworthy alliance with the Nationalists they could avail themselves of 'anything to beat Laurier.' This was the real inspiration that led those who control the Conservative party to-day to become opportunists of the worst kind in the desperate hope of wrenching an unrighteous victory from the present Administration."

Sir Wilfrid's Itinerary.

Montreal, Aug. 31.—Following is Sir Wilfrid Laurier's itinerary for the week after next in the Province of Quebec, announced yesterday morning:

Monday—Victoriaville, evening.
Tuesday—In the afternoon at Beance Junction, and in the evening at Thetford Mines.
Wednesday—Montmagny, 2 p.m.
Thursday—Quebec, for the English-speaking electors.
Friday—Rimouski, 1 p.m.
Saturday—Grand Mere, evening.

Want Wilson to Stay.

Hamilton, Aug. 31.—A number of dissatisfied Dundas Conservatives are circulating a petition addressed to Premier Whitney asking him not to accept the resignation of Gordon C. Wilson, M.P.P., for Dundas, who was nominated to run in Wentworth in the Dominion election, and urging the Premier to give his support to another man.

Factories Are Closed.

Cornwall, Aug. 31.—The water in the St. Lawrence River is so low that in order to keep the water in the canal up to the required level for navigation, it was necessary to close off the water from all the local factories at noone yesterday. The three local cotton factories, the paper mills, and all industries using electrical power were obliged to close down. The east wind had considerable to do with the lowering of the water, but it is hoped that if the wind changes the mills will be allowed to use water and electric power to-day.

The steamer Riverside, which went ashore above the St. Lawrence Power Co.'s power house a week ago last night, is still stuck fast, although the water was raised to the limit and several tugs tried to pull her off. The water in the river, and consequently in the canal, is lower than at any time for years past.

Conserve National Resources.

London, Aug. 31.—The London papers yesterday morning were impressed by the prediction in Sir William Ramsay's presidential address at a meeting of the British Association for the Advancement of Science at Portsmouth on Tuesday, that unless the present rate of consumption is retarded, England's coal fields will be exhausted in 175 years.

The editorials strongly support Sir William in urging the Government to follow the example of the United States and adopt measures to conserve the national resources.

To Fly Across Continent.

New York, Aug. 31.—Robert G. Fowler of Los Angeles, Cal., is announced as the first formal entrant in the coast to coast aeroplane flight contest for the William Randolph Hearst prize. Fowler, who will fly a bi-plane in his projected transcontinental trip, is expected to start from San Francisco on Sunday, Sept. 10. His route calls for a crossing of the Rockies between Laramie and Cheyenne, Wyoming.

Held Up at Border.

Kingston, Aug. 31.—Because he was stopped once before this season when he went over to work on one of the boats, Edward Charles was held up at Cape Vincent, N.Y., and refused admittance, although he was on his way to attend the funeral of his sister-in-law.

Motor Runs Down Bicyclist.

Kingston, Aug. 31.—Edward Reynolds was struck by a motor car while wheeling home to dinner and seriously injured. The car was owned by Mr. Baldon of Ottawa, his chauffeur being in charge. The wheel was demolished and the car was badly damaged.

Russian Seamen's Strike.

Odessa, Aug. 31.—The seamen's strike at Black Sea ports is extending to the volunteer fleet. Thirteen mail and passenger steamers are now tied up. A railway strike is threatened and 10,000 factory hands have struck at Lodz.

Thrown From Hip Rig.

Chatham, Aug. 31.—Joseph Brady's horse took fright at a motor cycle on the gravel road yesterday morning and Mr. and Mrs. Brady were thrown from the rig. Mr. Brady suffered a severe sprain to one of his ankles and was badly bruised and cut up. Mrs. Brady was unhurt.

PACT IS DEBATED

Six Speakers Join Issue on Reciprocity at Eganville

GUTHRIE CLINCHES NAIL

Eganville, Ont., Aug. 31.—Five thousand people stood for almost three hours under the glaring sun yesterday to hear the big debate on reciprocity between Hon. A. B. Aylesworth, Hugh Guthrie and T. A. Low on the Liberal side, and Hon. L. B. Lucas, M.P.P., T. W. McGarry, M.P.P., and Dr. Maloney of Eganville, for the Conservatives. T. W. Chethers, M.P., who was to have been the chief speaker on the Conservative side, was unable to attend, but his place was filled by Mr. McGarry.

The meeting, which was easily the largest ever held in the county of Renfrew, was conducted in a quiet and orderly manner and the speakers of both sides were given respectful and attentive hearing.

Sir Alan Aylesworth was the first speaker. He refrained from discussing the pact from a purely economic standpoint and criticized R. L. Borden and the Conservative party for what he termed "their shameful departure from the principles of the Conservative leaders and party since confederation."

He quoted extracts from Sir John A. Macdonald's speeches to show that he was in favor of a reciprocity agreement similar to that which the Liberal Government had secured, and which in fact had been the expressed desire and policy of every Canadian statesman since the abrogation of the Elgin treaty in 1866. He charged that the Conservatives were left without a policy or argument and were falling back upon the old refuge of waving the Union Jack, and contemptuously referred to the annexation cry as being unworthy of argument.

He attacked what he termed the "Bourassa-Sifton-Borden alliance" and declared that these men were incapable of government, as they were divided upon every question but one. Their only united policy was "anything to beat Laurier."

Hon. Mr. Lucas followed for the Conservatives. Taking up the question from the standpoint of the farmer, he advanced a host of arguments and statistics, to show that the market of ninety millions could not possibly mean higher prices for practically everything which they had to sell was raised and exported by the farmers in the United States. He also declared that the price for farm products across the border was lower than in Canada, and challenged his opponents to explain why it was that the Canadian farmer to-day, with his British market, was more prosperous than his neighbor to the south of him who had the privilege of the markets of the United States.

Mr. Guthrie in his reply paid an eloquent tribute to the Prime Minister, and in concluding said:

"As to the statement of Hon. Mr. Lucas that preference [illegible] telling progress in Britain, I can only tell you that during my recent visit to England I was told by Lord Hugh Cecil, one of the leaders of the Unionist party, that he would oppose any taxation upon food, and that if it were proposed it would divide the Unionist party in two."

T. W. McGarry, M.P.P., declared that the agreement was entered into by the Laurier Government solely to cloud over other issues and scandals which were creeping up, but that while the people should vote against reciprocity they should also bear in mind "the other scandals and dishonest administration of Sir Wilfrid Laurier."

New York's Insatiable Thirst.

New York, Aug. 31.—Despite the fact that between 12,000,000,000 and 15,000,000,000 gallons of water have been added to the city's reserve supply by the rains of the past few days, the possibility of a serious shortage is still present, according to Commissioner of Water Supply Thompson. The commissioner said yesterday afternoon that he would appear before the board of estimate and control and advocate the appropriation of $4,209,000 for connecting Ten-Mile River with the present Croton water system.

Seattle Murder Trial.

Chesterfield Court House, Va., Aug. 31.—The prosecution rested its case at noon yesterday against H. C. Beattie, jr., under indictment for the murder of his wife, and the defence began the introduction of its witnesses.

The prosecution produced fourteen witnesses yesterday, mostly county detectives, to controvert the testimony of young Alex Robertson as to the presence of more than one blood spot on the Midlothian turnpike where Mrs. Beattie was killed.

The state had contended that the big blood spot where the murder occurred was not caused by dripping from the machine in which the husband alleged his wife was seated when shot, declaring that no blood whatever could have oozed through the bottom of the car and the grease drip pan beneath.

The defence announced early in the day that it would call Paul Beattie to the stand again.

Forty Thousand Harvesters.

Winnipeg, Aug. 31.—Forty thousand men have been brought in by the C.P.R. and C.N.R. to harvest the western crops. Of this number 25,000 have come from Eastern Canada and the remainder from the south. Temperatures have risen all through the west. There was no frost Tuesday night at all, the average temperature was well above 50, and harvesting operations are proceeding very favorably. Threshing will be in full swing next week.

New Collegiate For Strathroy.

Strathroy, Aug. 31.—A vote of the ratepayers of the town of Strathroy was taken yesterday for the purpose of granting $40,000 for a new collegiate institute building and was carried by a majority of 178.

ACCUSE POLICE.

Relatives of Montreal Man Allege Brutal Treatment.

Montreal, Aug. 31.—Brutal treatment on the part of the police in the case of Alphonse La Berge, whose was brought to the Notre Dame Hospital on Tuesday from No. 3 station in an unconscious condition, and who died at that institution early yesterday, a fractured skull is charged by relatives of the dead man.

According to the story of Mrs. La Berge, the man's mother, and her daughter Delphine, Alphonse was in an intoxicated condition, and became unruly at the house of his mother on St. Timothee street so that the daughter notified the police, and at ten o'clock Officers Chaput and Lemiere came to arrest him. They found the man unwilling to go with them, and had hard work getting him as far as the door.

The girl Delphine says that as soon as the door was reached one of the officers gave La Berge a push toward the sidewalk, the man falling on his head from the step.

Alphonse La Berge never moved until aided from that time until he was placed in the patrol wagon. The girl Delphine adds that the officers took hold of the prisoner by the shoulders, lifting him from his prostrate position and dragged him for a hundred feet, his knees scraping the walk, after which they threw him across their shoulders until they reached the patrol, into which he was thrown, his head striking the seat.

Booked By Aeroplane.

London, Aug. 31.—Aviation is becoming a fashionable pastime, bookings for aerial trips having increased 100 per cent. during the last few weeks.

The growing reliability of machines and the increasing skill of airmen have mainly led to the popularity of flying. Mr. H. Barber, the inventor and pilot of the Valkyrie monoplane, whose headquarters are at Hendon, has booked $4,000 worth of passenger flights, and his "fares" require to be taken to all parts of the country.

"The aeroplane flights booked through our instrumentality are now increasing to an altogether remarkable extent," said the manager of the aviation department of Messrs. Keith, Prowse & Co. At first our charges for cross-country aerial flights were at the rate of a guinea a mile. Now, however, in view of the number of flights being made, we are able to reduce the price to half a guinea a mile, and even [illegible] by aeroplane are inainly in demand, and we had a 'fare' the other day, for instance, from Brooklands to the Isle of Wight.

Aviators Sued.

New York, Aug. 31.—Suit for $25,000 damages was filed yesterday by Mary Lynch of Delavin, Wis., against the Wright Co. for injuries sustained Sept. 18, 1910, when she was hit, she says, by an aeroplane driven by the late Archie Hoxsey, at Milwaukee. She claims to have been injured, and asserts that the accident could have been foreseen and provided against.

Charged With Manslaughter.

Winnipeg, Aug. 31.—Ralph E. Doe, motorman on the car which on Sunday night crushed Albert W. Wilson to death, was formally charged with manslaughter in the Police Court yesterday. The charge is based upon Doe's negligence in taking a Main street curve before his time. Doe is out on $5,000 bail.

WYETH'S SAGE & SULPHUR HAIR REMEDY

Kills the Dandruff Germ and Makes the Hair Grow

Restores Gray Hair to Natural Color

FEW people are aware of the number of Dandruff Germs that infest the human hair and scalp. The germs which locate themselves in the follicle or sack which envelopes the root of the hair, spend a lazy existence in sucking up the juices which should go to keep life and strength in the hair. These germs cannot be seen by the naked eye, but with a magnifying glass of from 300 to 400 diameters the spores of this hair destroyer may be seen in masses, clinging to the hair.

DANDRUFF, ITCHING OF THE SCALP AND FALLING HAIR ARE A SURE SIGN OF DESTRUCTIVE GERMS.

Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Hair Remedy not only kills the dandruff germs and prevents baldness, but it also restores faded and gray hair to natural color.

RUGBY MEETING CALLED FOR TUESDAY NIGHT

A meeting of the rugby enthusiasts of Peterborough is called for Tuesday night of next week in the Oriental Hotel parlours for the purpose of discussing the prospects for the season, and with a view of taking steps to give Peterborough a team this season. Surely the fans do not wish to see rugby go into discard as lacrosse has gone. Unless something is done, and done at once, the great fall game will be dead here and likely dead for some time. There is plenty of material here for a good team. All that is necessary is for the boys to get their shoulder to the wheel and let everyone work for the benefit of the game. There should be a large attendance at Tuesday night's meeting.

SEATS SOLD OUT FOR BIG WRESTLING MATCH

CHICAGO, AUG. 30.—The promoters of the great Hackenschmidt-Gotch match announced to-day that practically all the reserved seats for the Labour Day go had been sold, and that the greatest "gate" ever known in a wrestling championship will be assured.

The match will be held in the White Sox baseball park, which has a seating capacity of 23,000. Only grandstand seats have been reserved, at $10, $5 and $3, and it is admitted that the advance sale already totals more than $100,000.

The bleacher seats will be thrown open to the public on Monday at $1 a seat. The managers are confident 35,000—the largest crowd ever present at such an event—will see the match.

The Chicago Empire Athletic Club announced to-day that Doctors A. Price and J. J. Davis, club physicians, would examine both Gotch and Hackenschmidt before they entered the ring, and that neither man would be permitted on the mat unless he was in perfect physical condition.

Out-of-town visitors already are arriving for the match, and hotels report that advance reservations show that sporting men will come from the four corners of the globe. The advance sale of seats is already greater than the total crowd which witnessed the Jeffries-Johnson fight.

Referee E. W. Smith has completed the first set of catch-as-catch-can wrestling rules, he says, ever written. The rules were submitted to Hackenschmidt and his chief trainer, Dr. R. F. Roller and approved, though Hack balked for a time on a rule defining what is "offensive" and what is "defensive" wrestling.

No change was made, and each wrestler will be compelled to take the offensive at frequent intervals, under pain of disqualification. Hack's objection probably was based on the fact that he desired to remain on the defensive for an hour or two, permit Gotch to wear himself out, and then throw him.

Smith leaves to-day for Humboldt, Iowa, to submit the rules to Gotch. A unique feature is that, for the first time, the strangle hold is defined. Former wrestling articles, simply have barred the strangle hold, without telling what it was.

After a long period of lethargy, Hackenschmidt has resumed hard training to keep his muscles supple, though he will do little more mat work before the big event.

Gotch was expected to start for Chicago to-morrow, but it is now believed he will not come in before Saturday or Sunday, and will, by that time, have completed all his training. It is said the champion is getting a little restless, and that his managers thought it best to keep him in seclusion until the day of the match.

Hack Light Hearted and Gay.

Chicago, Aug. 30.—Because Hackenschmidt burst into song the training camp of the Russian 'Lion' was in an optimistic frame of mind to-day. Dr. Roller, the big fellow's trainer, said that he had been waiting anxiously for the musical outbreak, as it always indicates that the wrestler has reached the pink of condition.

"I have been waiting for him to sing ever since we left England," Roller said. "It indicates his frame of mind. If he were worrying he would not emit that lyrical roar."

Hackenschmidt did a bit of light road work to-day.

Athletics And Cubs Are Picked To Win The Pennants Again

(New York American)

Gather up your sporting sheet, you fans, and pause long enough to look over the standing of the clubs in the two major leagues. Then when the season comes to a close, compare the final ratings with those of to-day, and you will, in all probability, find that, with one or two exceptions, the positions remain intact.

This is generally the stage of the baseball campaign when a winner can almost be picked without "knocking wood." There have been years where the ultimate victor was in abeyance until the final day of the season. But you will invariably find that with the beginning of September the race has reached such a stage that a good line can be obtained on the teams possessing the best chances.

The Marathons in the two major organizations this season promise to be as thrilling as those of the past few years when the winners had to play the concluding game of the schedule in order to be assured of the ribbon. Judging by the inconsistent work and the fall and rise of the leading teams in the American and National leagues this season it is almost certain to narrow down to races down the stretch in which the games of the final week will decide the issues. The vanguard teams that have been graced with easy schedules toward the season's close will naturally stand the best chance of copping.

Uncertainty Makes Game.

But it is the uncertainty of things that has made baseball the game that it is—the national pastime. The teams that are looked upon as weak may rise in their wrath during the final games and may send calculations skyrocketing. The Giants will attest to the latter statement, for it has been their bitter experience to be beaten out of a pennant at a time when their chances appeared glorious. We refer to the time when Harry Covaleski, the terrible Pole, backed by eight other inconsiderate Philadelphia players, knocked the McGrawites out of a pennant a few years back. So it would be well for the leaders to consider the teams of lower rating and to fear them as much as they would the stronger members.

From the present outlook the Philadelphia Americans and the Chicago Nationals appear to have the best chance in their respective circuits. Of course, there are other teams that look as if they might share in the glory and remuneration accruing from a world's series. But when it comes to a showdown it would not be unwise to select these two aggregations to carry off the laurels.

The Cubs and Athletics have the advantage of playing a majority of their remaining games on home soil. There is an untold advantage for teams of their strength in finishing up to the schedule at home. With the confidence bred of success, these two teams will rip into the opposition unrelentlessly, and they should have little trouble winning more games than they lose from now until the season's close. But there is always the unexpected to be reckoned with. There may be a general upheaval in the standing ere long, but that is hardly likely.

There are many who will dispute the assertion that the Cubs and Athletics are to be the favoured parties. They will contend that the Giants and Pirates must be considered in the National League hunt, while the Detroit Tigers must not be overlooked in the American League chase. The Giants and the Pirates and Tigers have been given due consideration, and it is hard to figure how it is possible for these to wedge their way into the world's series celebration.

Giants Have Been Inconsistent.

In the first place we'll consider the Giants. McGraw's squad have been an inconsistent lot. That much cannot be denied. They have played some of their worst exhibitions when opposed to the down-trodden Rustlers, and have shown championship form when arrayed against the Cubs and Pirates. Again, Mathewson's fielding this season has done much to retard the progress of the Giants. Otey Crandall, who was looked upon as a regular one at the outset of the season, has been relegated to his old job of relief pitcher. "Red" Ames, who is followed everlastingly by a jinx of some sort, has lost many heart-breaking games because old Hard Luck has been sticking to him like an adhesive tack.

The Giants are admittedly the best base-running outfit in either of the major leagues, but daring on the paths will not help if the pinch punch is not forthcoming. The Giant pitchers have had the misfortune of pitching their best games when the team was not hitting, while they have shown up their worst while the club was in a batting streak. Unreliable and inconsistent work sums up why the Giants do not look like the winners of the National League gonfalon.

Passing on to the Pirates: The Smoky City crew must be looked upon as the "dark horse" of the race. Like the Giants, they have played in streaks, showing well one week and showing very bad the following period. "Babe" Adams the hero of the world's series of 1909, is beginning to show the strain of overwork and will have to be handled delicately hereafter. While the Pirates are a pack of sluggers, they are not the best base runners in the world, and their lack of speed on the bases has lost quite a few games.

Quakers and Cardinals Out.

The Quakers and Cardinals do not appear to have a look in for the big honours. Both teams have been greatly hindered by injuries to star players. Philadelphia suffered immeasurably while Magee was under the ban. His heavy stickwork would have gone a long way towards bringing victories to the Quakers in their series against the Giants and the Western teams. Manager Dooin probably will not play for the balance of the season. This deprives the Quaker machine of its main cog.

The Cardinals are struggling along without the regular and much required services of their crack manager and catcher, Roger Bresnahan. Bresnahan's presence is needed in a game every day if the Cardinals are to finish among the first four.

In the American League the race is between the Athletics and Tigers. There is not an earthly chance for any of the other teams butting in on the frolic of the Quakerites and Detroiters. The Mack men have shown unlimited gameness, and it is this trait which has been well developed in everyone of the Philadelphians, that makes them the choice for the American League banner.

The Cubs are going smoothly again now that Chance and the pugnacious Joe Tinker have settled their differences. Young Saier is a fixture at first base, while Heine Zimmerman is filling in at second base as well as any one could. "Runt" Doyle at third has been one of the season's sensations. This infield is now working in unison. Frank Schulte, the champion home-run getter, has regained some of his old speed, and with his ability to crack the ball to the furthermost corners of the lot, the Cubs look unbeatable.

CURE SICK HEADACHE.

Injuries In The Prize Ring

"You hear a lot about injuries done in the ring, but you have never heard about the counter-irritant one blow is to another, have you?"

This question was put by Kid Lavigne, the once famous lightweight, whose experience convinces him that there are no two sides to the question of ring injuries, and who doesn't believe that a fit man was ever injured in a fistic encounter. He continued:

"Look at this ear that I'm carrying," and he indicated the cauliflower appendage that most fighters carry on the left side of their heads as badges of their business—"it is a memory of one. My old friend, Joe Walcott, gave it to me in our first fight, and almost at the start of it. Some people think that Walcott can hit. It got past the imagination place with me before we boxed one round. I knew it was true the first time he landed. And the first time that he put one fair on this left ear he sent me back to my corner wondering if I'd ever forget that poke.

"That was where I got my ear. In a round or two it puffed up and filled with blood so that it looked like a raw tomato. It felt worse than it looked. There was a whole comic opera chorus in my head, singing songs that sounded like the music that you hear in the dentist's chair just before they wake you up. What would have happened if Wolcott had not played surgeon for me no one can tell. But along in the fourth or fifth round he brought his glove over on the bad ear, pulled the head across it, and burst the ear. The songs stopped, the pain went, the ear shrank, and Mr. Walcott was stopped in round 15.

Dick Burge, the English fighter, performed another operation for me. It was the year after the Walcott affair, and Richard attended to my nose. Through being hit on the bridge in other fights so many times a little lump had formed. It wasn't painful, but it didn't look pretty, and it didn't help me any in my breathing. But I didn't pay much attention to it until Burge and I had got all warmed up in our mill in London. The fight went seventeen rounds, and we hadn't gone half of that route when Burge came to me with a straight right on the nose that carried me part way to the sleeping quarters. No one ever hit me as hard on the nose. I had to guess where my corner was at the finish, and I steered for it by the voices of my handlers. When I cleared my nose a thick clot of blood was discharged. That clot must have been the lump that had been bothering me, and my nose was as good as new when I went out for the next round. I beat Burge, and he gave me a present of a straight nose to boot."

Griffo had more fun with Lavigne's nose than did any boxer who ever faced the Saginaw lad, according to George himself. They fought first in Chicago—an eight-round draw in 1894—and a year later went twenty rounds, also a draw, at Maspeth. "He was like one of those octopus things that have a dozen arms," said Lavigne. "He threw a hodful of hands at me every time I went after him. I'd start out, and would lead one that looked as if it ought to land, and send the Australian over the ropes. So far as I could see Griffo never moved. But I didn't see much, for as soon as I led and started in, six or eight gloves would land on my nose and knock my head back so that I was looking at the ceiling.

"He had my neck in a hinge until the fight was about half gone, when I gave up anything that seemed like boxing, just rushing wildly and trying to bear him before me. I couldn't hurt him because he was too shifty, but he tired so that he couldn't stop to do any boxing himself, and that, when you'd had him throwing a lot of gloves at you, was worth something."

Lavigne bears one scar that wasn't given to him in the ring, and that, therefore, didn't fade away. He got it while he was in Boston in the heyday of his career. One of the sports who are ever fastening themselves on successful fighters touched George for a dollar. Lavigne was about to stand the tap, but, urged by Billy Hennessy, finally refused the money. The touchee, to show that there were no hard feelings, gashed Lavigne's neck with a pocketknife, leaving a bad scar.

The life of the pugilist, in the main, isn't as strenuous as it was in the best days of Lavigne. Big gloves, short bouts, police supervision, well-lighted arenas, a race of pugs who are boxers, simply, and few of whom can be termed fighting men, have changed the game. Lavigne built himself up by hustling like a navvy up the Saginaw in his boyhood days, and he had a whirl at the private game that wasn't very nice or very remunerative, but was a wonderfully effective educational business.

POST CARD COLUMN

Sporting Editor, Examiner.

Dear Sir,—The original Quaker Oats Tug-of-war team issues a challenge, through the medium of the press, to all comers in the Labour Day sports at Riverside Park; teams to consist of nine men a side. This team, I might say, is training with a view of a pull with Tom Flanagan's team of Toronto. Mr. F. Stevens, the captain of the team, feels confident that he can maintain the prestige of the Quakers throughout. Then we have another team that are very anxious to take on a pull with any combination in or out of the city, captained over by Mr. Phippo. An early reply, through the press, or otherwise, will oblige

Yours, etc.,
Jack Murphy.

OBITUARY

HELEN GERTRUDE McBAIN.

The death occurred yesterday of Helen Gertrude McBain, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James McBain, of 217 Rubidge street.

The little one was 6 months, 21 days old. She was taken ill with an attack of cholera infantum, and after a hard fight, succumbed to the disease.

The funeral will take place on Friday, Sept. 1st at 2.30 o'clock, to the Little Lake cemetery.

BROOKS' COMET

Local astronomers will be interested to know that Brooks' comet is visible these nights in 19 hrs. 56 mins. with a declination of 51 degrees, 55 minutes. It may be seen about 10 o'clock almost directly overhead and may be picked up with a pair of good opera glasses although it is not yet visible to the naked eye. The comet is growing brighter each evening but very slowly.

Another interesting phenomenum is that the sun, which has been without spots for some months, or without any disturbance except the solar fires is now showing a disturbance on its north-east nimbus.

TREATMENT OF WOUNDS

From Farm and Dairy.

The very first thing to do for every wound, great or small, is to thoroughly cleanse it with boiled water—not hot water, remember, but water that has been boiled and cooled. Blessed is the mother who keeps a kettle filled with boiling water at all hours of the day! Boiling water is necessary for so many things, but many housekeepers feel that their whole duty is not done unless they have the kettle emptied and turned upside down on its own particular shelf after each meal. Bathe the wound with water as hot as the sufferer can stand, and let it bleed freely. This does not mean that a great deal of blood should escape with nothing done to stop it, but in the ordinary wound a bit of blood, a nail, or other simple improvement has made a little wound. Hot water is very soothing and also lessens the danger of blood poisoning.

For sprains and bruises hot water is also very helpful. If the skin is not broken the water need not be boiled and cooled, but ordinary hot water as hot as the patient can stand should be applied. Many times the inflammation is reduced at once and the pain eased as if by magic by the simple application of hot water, where cold would only annoy.

For burns, cool applications give relief, and some sort of remedy like soda or apple butter or starch should be applied, to keep the air from the skin. If a child is burned, the best thing is to wrap up the place, to exclude the air, and put the sufferer to sleep. Rest and quiet and the soothing lotion will do wonders even to a little baby.

FLY POISONS

From Farm and Dairy.

A cheap and reliable fly poison, which is not dangerous to human life, is bichromate of potash in solution. Dissolve one dram, which may be bought at any drug store, in two ounces of water; add a little sugar, and place about the house in shallow dishes.

To clear rooms of flies use carbolic acid, heating a shovel and pouring on it 20 drops of the poison. The vapor will kill the flies. Another method: Burn pyrethrum powder in the room. The flies will fall to the floor stupefied and may be swept up and burned. The powder should be moistened and molded into cones, and, after drying, each cone should be placed upon a dish and lighted at the top. It will burn slowly, and the odor is not disagreeable.

Flies pass the winter hidden in cracks and holes in attics and cellars. Many of these may be killed in the spring by the two methods just described.

Be sure that all drugs and chemicals used are fresh and pure, otherwise results may not be satisfactory.

Dea Co., Ont.

IMPROVEMENT IN TOMATOES

From Farm and Dairy.

J. W. Clark, Brant Co., Ont.

There has been a wonderful improvement in my tomatoes in the last few years. I started three or four years ago to breed a more desirable type of the Earliana tomato. The Earliannas at that time did not ripen uniformly or early enough to suit my requirements. Also they were not smooth.

I selected seed from plants which had all the tomatoes on that plant of the kind I wanted. As a result of my work I have a tomato that is smooth, ripens uniformly, and is ready for market before the tomatoes grown by any of our neighbors. All this is due to seed selection. Our dealer will pay me one-third more for my tomatoes than for the ordinary stock on account of their smoothness.

Another important detail in which I improved my strain of Earlianas was in increasing the meatiness. It just took two years of seed selection to improve the meatiness of the tomato to a remarkable extent.

THE FRENCH FOOD RIOT

Disturbances Occur in 30 or 40 Towns and Are Spreading to the South

SHOPS PILLAGED

Paris, Sept. 1.—A campaign which has for its purpose a reduction of the high prices of food was started yesterday in Paris.

Ten taxicabs, the occupants carrying devices on which were inscribed demands that the cost of necessaries be lowered, paraded through the Champs Elysee and other thoroughfares.

Open agitation, with some violence, is going on in thirty or forty towns and cities in the northern departments, and the movement is spreading to other parts of France.

Energetic demonstrations are being held at Orleans, the capital of the department of Loiret.

At Douai, department of Nord, banners bearing the inscription "butter at thirty sous or revolution," were borne in a procession of 2,000 persons, mostly women, here yesterday. As they marched the manifestants sang revolutionary hymns.

At Lille, the general confederation of labor has taken up the agitation. Six thousand metal workers voiced their protest yesterday by parading through the streets.

Serious riots over the price of food occurred in St. Quentin last night. The mob pillaged several butcher stores and set fire to one of them, in spite of the efforts of the police.

Ban on Joy Riding.

Toronto, Sept. 1.—Expulsion from the Ontario Motor League is threatened by the directors as a penalty for reckless driving on the part of the members.

They have decided to send a circular to all their members, asking that they drive carefully and that they report to the secretary of the league any cases of furious and reckless driving which may come under their notice. The league has always favored and advocated careful driving. The reason for the steps that will be taken, is that there have been several serious accidents recently.

E. A. James, engineer, has reported to the league that three-fourths of the work of improving York County roads would be finished by the end of 1913.

Standard Oil Dissolved.

New York, Sept. 1.—The Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey, the corporation which has been the storm centre of anti-trust agitation throughout the country for years, yesterday passed out of existence, so far as its present form and functions are concerned.

The work of apportioning the company's holdings of the stock of more than 30 subsidiaries affected will occupy at least three months.

Parker Goes to Pen.

Seattle, Wn., Sept. 1.—George H. Parker of Seattle, convicted in New York of using the mails to defraud in connection with the sale of stock in the United Wireless Telegraph Co., was brought to the federal prison on McNeil Island from New York yesterday and began serving a sentence of two years' imprisonment. Parker is rated as a millionaire.

"NOT A PARTY ISSUE."

So Says Sir James Whitney Refering to Reciprocity.

Hamilton, Sept. 1.—Premier Whitney spoke in Dundas last night before the Conservatives of Wentworth County.

A big crowd of Hamilton people went out for the big meeting, and the gallery of the house was filled with ladies.

E. B. Osler, M.P., of Toronto, who preceded Sir James, characterized Fielding and Paterson as the two Rip Van Winkles of this country, for the reason that they had been politically asleep for twenty years and had arranged a treaty which might have been a good thing for the Dominion twenty years ago, but which would be a detriment to the country now.

Sir James denied that reciprocity is a party issue, and said that the agreement was arranged by Fielding and Paterson without the knowledge of anyone else in Canada, except Sir Wilfrid Laurier. "If it was a party question, why did not the members of the Liberal party know about it?" asked the Premier. He then referred to the statement of Lloyd Harris, M.P., that if the question had been brought up in Liberal caucus 90 per cent. of the members would have been against it."

"I believe that every intelligent man in Canada who has studied this measure, no matter what he may say, is at heart opposed to it," declared Sir James.

Kicked In Fight.

Ottawa, Sept. 1.—Echoes of the Liberal faction fight at Campbell's Bay Tuesday evening on the occasion of the Aylesworth-Fisher meeting were heard yesterday, when John Hirty was brought to the Water street hospital in a critical condition as a result of kicks received from an ardent Hodgins' supporter. Hirty was one of those who were in the thickest of the fight and after the smoke of battle had cleared away, was found lying in the hotel yard unconscious and bleeding.

He was carried to the train and removed to his home on a stretcher. Yesterday his condition became serious and was brought to the hospital here, where he now lies in a critical condition. He complains of having been brutally kicked in the abdomen. One of the men who participated in the fight is now under arrest and his trial will be held at Shawville in a few days.

Warlike Preparations.

Brussels, Sept. 1.—The Belgium Government continues actively engaged in completing the armament of all the garrisons on the German and French borders. Several trains have been dispatched with ammunition and guns from the Liege arsenal to Namur, Liege and Antwerp, all three forts are being inspected.

At Antwerp the engineer corps are transporting all campaign material from Tete de Flandre to the Antwerp side of the Scheldt.

The Belgian newspapers explain the activity by the statement that the talk of European hostilities has awakened the Belgian War Ministry to the unprepared condition of the Belgian army and defences.

Burglars Used a Wagon.

Montreal, Sept. 1.—Burglars who broke into the premises of Guilbault Brothers, St. Lawrence, Wednesday night by the front door, opened a rear door, and backing a wagon up loaded it heavily with butter, hams, lard, tinned meats, etc., to the value of $500.

Got Minimum Sentence.

Lindsay, Sept. 1.—Frank Reynolds, the 16-year-old Toronto lad who on Sunday last hired a horse from Lindsay's livery, drove it to Port Perry and sold the equine there for a small sum, was yesterday morning sentenced to the minimum period of six months in Central Prison. The boy has also to face a similar charge in Peterboro.

PLAYING A DOUBLE GAME

Sir Wilfrid Shows Up Montreal Conservative Trick—Produces an Anti-Imperial Pamphlet Distributed Among French

BY ENEMIES OF PACT

New Glasgow, N.S., Sept. 1.—Sir Wilfrid Laurier concluded his triumphal tour of Nova Scotia last night with another long-to-be-remembered demonstration. Eight thousand enthusiastic men and women thronged the great arena and hundreds were turned away. So great was the competition for places of vantage that two hundred men climbed to the rafters and ensconced themselves in this advantageous if perilous position. "Nova Scotia holds that well enough is not good enough when we can do better," was the slogan which canopied the platform. It is the keynote of public sentiment in this province.

En route to New Glasgow he held three meetings, speaking to the Hants electors at Shubenacadie, to the Colchester people at Truro and the constituency of Pictou at Stellarton.

In the course of his New Glasgow address, Sir Wilfrid produced a copy of Le Devoir of July 13, and a reproduction of the articles as a leaflet, which he read. It charged that he was an ultra-Imperialist, and had intrigued with Chamberlain to carry on their ambitious Imperial projects through this 'infamous war.'"

"What has this to do with the present issue before the Canadian people" queried Sir Wilfrid. "It has this to do with it, my fellow-countrymen. I charge that the anti-reciprocity Conservatives have entered into an unholy alliance with Mr Bourassa and the Nationalists in an effort to defeat the Government at this time. The Montreal Herald, which has been investigating the circumstances surrounding the promulgation of the article I have read you, advises us, and publishes the statement, that the distribution of this article in the parishes of my native province is being financed and paid for by the anti-reciprocity Conservative party in Montreal [illegible] by these gentlemen that I am conspiring to betray Imperial interests and British connection; my compatriots are told by the same gentlemen that I am conspiring with and for British Imperialists. What does it mean What is its purpose? Perhaps Mr. Borden or Mr. Bourassa can tell."

Sir Wilfrid concluded amid a tempest of cheering with the declaration that his dual creed was Canada and British connection.

Will Hold Joint Debate.

Ottawa, Sept. 1.—Henri Bourassa will speak at Hull on Sept. 5, and the meeting will develop into a joint debate between Bourassa and E. B. Devlin, K.C., Liberal candidate in Wright County. Mr. Devlin announced yesterday that he would certainly appear on the platform in answer to Mr. Bourassa.

Premier's Ontario Tour.

Ottawa, Sept. 1.—Sir Wilfrid Laurier speaks in Alexandria on Monday night, going thence for another tour through Ontario, in which he will be heard at Cobourg, Sudbury, Collingwood and Stratford. Afterwards the Premier will return to Quebec. In Quebec City he will deliver an address in English and later speak at Drummond-Arthabaska, Montmagny, Megantic, Rimouski and Champlain.

Aviator Badly Hurt.

Freeport, Ill., Sept. 1.—Fred. Heegles, 28 years of age, an amateur aviator of Chicago, was probably fatally injured and a number of spectators were hurt Wednesday when Heegles' biplane fell fifty feet during an exhibition flight. The exhibition was for the benefit of Mrs. Daniel Kramer, whose husband was killed a short time ago while trying for a pilot's license in Chicago. None of the spectators were severely injured.

Chicago Firemen Hurt.

Chicago, Sept. 1.—Fighting against flames which swept through a four-storey building in the downtown district yesterday, ten firemen were slightly injured by an explosion of chemicals, and before the fire was extinguished $160,400 worth of property was burned. The greatest loss was suffered by the Jenner Medical Co. and a manufacturer of beer pumps, the principal occupants of the building.

Child Burned With House.

Chatham, Sept. 1.—The three-year-old granddaughter of Mrs. Edeline met death in a fire which completely destroyed the residence on concession six. Children were playing with matches upstairs. In an attempt to save goods the child was lost sight of and the body was later found in the ruins. Coroner Stewart decided an inquest unnecessary.

Guelph and Peoples' Railway.

Guelph, Ont., Sept. 1.—The Railway and Manufacturers' committee of the City Council decided yesterday to recommend that the Council give the Peoples' Railway ninety days' notice, and if they do not carry out the agreement with the city to apply to the Railway Commission to cancel the agreement.

LEMIEUX'S REBUKE

Says He is Ashamed of the Part Which Monk and Bourassa and Their Adherents Are Taking in the Campaign

THE RACE CRY

Montreal, Sept. 1.—In a speech delivered before the Young Liberals of Montreal, Hon. R. Lemieux denounced the clergy of the province for the part they are taking in the present fight. In part he said: "I am ashamed to hear Monk and Bourassa denounce Laurier's naval policy. Today men want to raise a monument in bronze to Dollard des Ormeaux. It is the cult of heroism, but what the question of founding a Canadian navy is raised, destined to protect our coasts, to protect our commerce, flying the Canadian flag, manned by Canadian marines, commanded by Canadian officers, what they preach is fear and cowardice. They want us to be a modest crown colony, as in the past fifty years." He ridiculed Mr. Bourassa's statement concerning conscription, made by him and followers in the Drummond-Arthabaska fight. England, a great naval power for two hundred years, has never had conscription, for the English people want freedom.

"The young Nationalist clergy who oppose the navy, if they read the statutes, would say maintain the British flag in Canada, for to it they owe their liberty. I am a Catholic, and I can say I am a Liberal, and am proud of it. Lecordaire said: 'When I die I will be a penitent monk, but an impenitent Liberal,' and yet these hot-headed, brainless and broken-down men, like Blondin, go about the country saying we owe nothing to England, and we will not give them a navy. Is the Canadian country the monopoly of English-speaking persons? Do we not belong to it? Have we no interest in conserving this land that our fathers fought and died for? To pretend otherwise is the greatest insult possible, and if I judge by the enthusiasm, the victory of good sense of reason against Chauvinism, fanaticism and narrowness.

Ferryboat Not to Blame.

Toronto, Sept. 1.—Instead of giving the ferryboat the right of way which it should have had, it was shown at the inquest at the morgue last night that Clayton Smith, who was in charge of the launch, the sinking of which caused the death of Mrs. Hattie Gates, had not noticed the ferries approaching until within a few feet of it and had gone straight ahead. And it was also shown that had Smith swerved to the right instead of to the left he might have merely scraped sides with the ferry, as the captain of the steamer, "T.J. Clark," had turned his boat to the right when he saw that the launch was not going behind him. Instead, Smith turned to the left, foiled the captain's attempt to miss him and was run down.

Mrs. Gotch Will Be There.

Humboldt, Iowa, Sept. 1.—Mrs. Frank Gotch will accompany her husband when he goes to Chicago to complete his training for his match with Hackenschmidt on Labor Day. She will occupy a box close to the mat and will entertain a party of her friends at the match.

Jesse Westergaard, one of Gotch's trainers, expresses the opinion that the champion will try neither a hammerlock nor any sort of a Nelson on Hackenschmidt. "It would be useless," said Westergaard. "Mack is too strong around the neck and shoulders. He will work on his legs."

Accidentally Shoots Brother.

Cobalt, Sept. 1.—Barney Albany, aged 15, was killed at Pork Rapids, on Montreal River, Wednesday, when his brother, two years older, was handing him a gun over a rock. The gun was accidentally discharged, the shot entering his throat, killing him instantly.

FEARS REPRISALS.

Borden Does Not Think Pact Can Be Abrogated.

Richmond, Que., Sept. 1.—Mr. R. L. Borden arrived here yesterday afternoon in the course of his tour of the eastern townships, and spoke to a large audience in support of Dr. Hays, the Opposition candidate in Richmond-Wolfe division. Mr. Borden was given a cordial reception.

"Does any one imagine," asked the leader, "that the United States would claim no power to dictate the fiscal policy of this country if they were once given an opening? One need only remember what happened last year, when that nation threatened us with a discriminatory tariff, to understand what the power of the republic is, even at the present time. If they had put a duty of 70 per cent. against us, it would have forced us into a state of panic. If, when reciprocity has been in force five years and that trade has grown to more than $500,000,000 we could abrogate this treaty only at the peril of such reprisals as already threatened, what would it mean to us?"

Dr. Hays asked the farmers how they could hope anything to be gained by being granted access to the New England market, when the farmers that already have that market find it insufficient to maintain their farms and are abandoning them to move to the west by the wholesale.

Sherbrooke, Que., Sept. 1.—R. L. Borden was tendered a fine reception here last night on his return from Richmond. A large procession, including five bands, playing national airs, escorted him to His Majesty's Theatre, where two thousand were present to hear him outline the Conservative program. Many more were unable to gain admittance and an overflow meeting was formed outside, which was addressed by Mr. Borden's lieutenants, while he was speaking within.

Mr. Borden covered the same ground as at Richmond.

LUMBER MEN PROTEST.

Americans Undersselling Canadians on Our Own Market.

Vancouver, Sept. 1.—A sensation was caused yesterday at a joint session of coast and mountain sawmill men of British Columbia, when it was alleged that American competitors have taken advantage of the absence of the duty on rough lumber to send thousands of carloads of dressed lumber into the prairie markets without paying the duty, as required by the Canadian Customs tariff.

Customs officers, it was alleged, overlook proper classification of imported dressed lumber, and continue to pink at devices methods declared to be in vogue. A strong protest will be sent to Ottawa.

The meeting devoted nearly all day to a consideration of the situation created by the competition of Puget Sound and Idaho rivals in western Canada. The depression in the lumber trade south of the international boundary has resulted in an invasion of the markets of the prairie provinces and British Columbia at prices estimated to be lower than actual manufacturing costs. A strong committee, entrusted with the task of devising ways and means to meet the extraordinary conditions which now prevail, was appointed. It will report to a special meeting to be held next month.

British Miners Restless.

London, Sept. 1.—A deep undercurrent of unrest and dissatisfaction exists among the coal miners, who are agitating for a minimum wage.

The miners threaten a national coal strike unless a settlement of this question is arrived at without undue delay.

A great conference of miners will be held in October, when, if the matter has not been settled, preparations will be made for a strike to take place in November or the beginning of December.

Schooner Burned at Sea.

New York, Sept. 1.—Wireless reports received here yesterday afternoon from the steamer Oklahoma, bound from New York to Port Arthur, Texas, tell of the burning of an unidentified schooner at sea yesterday and a futile search by the Oklahoma for the crew of the doomed vessel.

BRIEFS FROM THE WIRES.

Mr. Henri Bourassa is laid up with laryngitis.

S. A. Greening, a prominent Hamilton business man, is dead.

The Canadian Light & Power Co. turned on power at Montreal.

Seven days' rain in New York has saved the city from a water famine.

The schooner Keepsake ran on a rock near Aphersburg and was wrecked.

Mrs. McIntyre of Brantford was fatally burned when her clothes and bedding caught fire from a lamp.

Anxiety prevails in France as to the outcome of negotiations with Germany, but war is regarded as highly improbable.

Fuller & Co. have been awarded the contract for the construction of the Lord Selkirk Hotel in Winnipeg. The building is to cost $1,250,000.

During artillery manoeuvres at Warsaw a shrapnel shell exploded in a crowd of peasants. Three persons were killed and sixteen wounded.

At a meeting of the shareholders of the Agricultural Loan Co. in London, the terms of the proposed merger with the Ontario Loan Co. was accepted.

More than half a dozen tenders were received yesterday by the N. T. Commissioners for the construction of the G.T.P. terminus at Quebec, which will cost about a million dollars.

The western railroads will put into effect on Oct. 6 a rate on flour from Minneapolis to New York, lake and rail, of 21 1-2 cents a hundred pounds, while the all-rail will stand at 25 cents.

The customs receipts for the Dominion for the five months of the fiscal year which closed on Aug. 31, totalled $38,893,145, as compared with $33,601,602 for the same period last year, an increase of $4,304,543.

For Losing Mona Lisa.

Paris, Sept. 1.—Theophile Homolle, director of the National Museums, was suspended by the French Cabinet yesterday in consequence of the disappearance of Leonardo De Vinci's painting, "Mona Lisa," from the Louvre. It was the opinion of the members of the Ministry that M. Homolle took insufficient precautions to guard the treasures in the museums.

Candidates Sign Agreement.

Chatham, Sept. 1.—The campaign in West Kent over the question of reciprocity is growing in interest. Both candidates have signed an agreement that they will conduct an absolutely clean campaign, and a joint fund of $1,000 has been deposited for the purpose of prosecuting any person on either side who is found guilty of bribing the electorate.

BLOSSOM'S LITTLE PAL

The Change Time Wrought in the Two Companions.

By ETHEL BARRINGTON.

When John Blossom became blind the mainspring of his life was snapped. Embittered and sensitive, he shunned companionship, his small income sufficing for a cheap lodging and meals at a neighboring restaurant. It was terrible beyond expression to be blind, to be dragged back to life when the fever had so deadened him. Existence was barren, useless, hopeless, and when he prayed it was for death.

One day, tripping as he climbed the stairs, he felt the help of baby hands. "You counted wrong," reproved a childish voice. "I did t'ever night in the dark."

"What's your name?" he demanded shortly.

"Dora. Who's you?"

"John Blossom."

"Pretty name. Bend down." Then, whispering in his ear, "I shall call you Blossom," she scampered away, singing back mischievously, "Blossom—B-l-o-s-s-o-m."

It was a week before they met again. The man's mood was desperate. "You is frownin' awful, Blossom," piped the shrill voice, "but you can't frighten me."

"If you are not scared come and talk to me a bit."

"Muver don't 'low me in lodgers' rooms." Blossom felt the rebuff and, reaching the top floor, stumbled into his room and slammed the door. Seated on his cot, he clinched his hands in the agony of his helplessness.

"Come," he cried sharply in answer to a timid rap, wherent some one entered whom he could not recognize. "What is it?" he half shouted, his nerves strained to the point of frenzy.

"Just me, Blossom. Muver says you is exceptious." Then in the silence the child's eyes roved over the room and lighted on the table littered with papers. "Does you write?" Her tone betokened interest. Blossom's hands moved aimlessly. "Write, write? That's precisely what I can't do, curse it!" There before him lay the work begun in pride and hope, now shattered by a darkness worse than death. He was recalled to the present by the pressure of small arms resting on his knees as the child looked up into his despairing face.

"Poor dear!" she sympathized in an old fashioned manner.

"It's dark, Dora—never any light. That's why I cannot write." His voice broke with a half sob.

"I'm dreadful sorry. Let me do it for you. I print now, and I learn fast. See if I don't." She tossed the papers aside and climbed into a chair, sucking loudly at the pencil to make it black. "What will we write, Blossom?" Receiving no answer, she looked up. Her companion's head was pillowed on his arms. His shoulders heaved. Could a man cry even as she sometimes did? Dora scrambled to her feet and hurried from the room, to return a few minutes later flushed and breathless.

"Here's Miss Arabella!" she cried, thrusting a doll into the man's hands. "When I get cryin' I just hold her tight. She comforts lots. Muver's callin'. Hold Arabella close, Blossom."

The doll became the first link in a strange friendship, which grew with years. For the child's amusement Blossom brought wonderful tales out of the storehouse of his imagination, frequently in verse that he strung together during wakeful hours of the night. Dora listened and remembered. As she had said, she learned fast. She was barely twelve when she recalled her promise. "I write truly now. Tell me what to write."

Blossom smiled sadly, declaring the desire dead, but she insisted and coaxed until he yielded, repeating some of the phrasings that haunted him, and the dormant passion revived. It was new birth to the man, and the girl became his eyes, as the gift that had been smothered in darkness and uncertainty suddenly developed, and the past came into his own. In time "our poetry," as Dora called it, verses with exquisite rhythm, in round childish chirography, found their way into editors' hands and caused comment.

So the years passed, and Blossom counted each anniversary as it came. "Fifteen today," he said on one occasion, sighing heavily. "I wish so I could see you once—just once."

Dora raised her head from copying. It was unusual for Blossom to chat before the dictation was completed. "How do you look?" continued the blind man, directing his sightless gaze toward her.

"Whose decision shall I render?" Dora laughed deliciously. "Mother says a 'big girl,' Aunt Helen 'gawky,' but Tom insists 'pretty.'"

"Of course Tom is right. Well, here is my remembrance." Fumbling in his pocket, he brought out a little case, disclosing a gold locket with a diamond set in its heart shape.

"Oh, Blossom, how lovely! But what extravagance! You can't afford it."

"You mistake. I have more money than I need, little pal."

The girl slipped the slender chain about her neck and gave the clasp into his hands; then as he clumsily fitted it together she threw her arms about his neck and kissed him. His pulses throbbed riotously at the warm touch of her lips, and he hardly dared trust himself to kiss her in return.

Strangely enough, it was the last caress she offered. From that birthday she seemed to leave childhood behind, and the man suffered in the change. He grew to dread the succeeding years. His pal was growing into womanhood and so further away from him. He could have lived luxuriously had he desired, but he clung to the old lodging. Critics and public alike acknowledged his genius, yet the whole world was bound up in Dora to the blind author—Dora, whose voice was as music, whose step he could distinguish in a million. He encouraged her to talk about her friends, her ambitions, and—yes, he made her tell him about Tom, too—Tom, who had grown to be a man and on whom Dora's mother looked kindly.

"I must be going now," said Dora after a fruitless afternoon, Blossom having been unable to settle to work.

"Tom coming?"

"Yes." Her voice was a little tired. Blossom noticed it.

"You have not quarreled?"

"Tom never will. Blossom, do you want me to marry Tom?"

"Marry?" The attack was sudden. "Marry! It's beautiful when young people love enough for that. But your mother were better consulted. I am only an old bachelor."

"You are my pal," persisted the girl impatiently. "Mother married young. She thinks I should, but—I don't want to be hurried."

"Quite right," began Blossom quickly. Then, pulling himself together: "Tom's a nice boy. He will make a good husband"—

"He is all you say. I suppose I shall take him. Blossom, I know he is going to ask me tonight." The girl hung over the back of her friend's chair. He could feel her breath on his cheek, but it was a pity he could not see the look in her eyes. Blossom gripped the arm rests as if for support.

"God bless you both, little pal," he said steadily. "I know you will be a good wife. Tom's a lucky fellow."

"You think I had better take him. You wish me to"— The girl bent still closer; her hair brushed his forehead.

"I wish—only your happiness."

"Dora! Dora!" It was her mother calling. Dora moved hesitatingly toward the door. "We will always be pals—always just the same?"

Blossom lifted his head. "Always," he promised. "Don't think about me. You love Tom."

"I love Tom—yes." Then the door closed, and Blossom sank back in his chair. Misery showed livid in his face and stooping shoulders. Dora loved Tom! It had come at last. It seemed as if this second loss were greater, more terrible, than that of his sight. He was doubly bereft. He had promised the girl they would remain pals, but new ties, new duties, would arise. The old must be laid aside; he must school himself to be alone. The sweat broke on his forehead as he clinched his hands; then, with a groan, he folded his arms on his knees and hid his face. He crouched motionless, taking no notice of the passage of time.

Softly, timidly, some one touched him on the shoulders. The man thrilled; his soul leaped out to meet that other self. Passionately his arms opened and claimed the girlish figure of his pal. He felt her throbbing in response, the trembling of her hands as she clung to him.

"Blossom—Blossom, speak to me!" she whispered. "Tell me you love me."

"Love you? With all my being! Dora, who is there in all the world like you?"

"Why did you make me suffer—why did you make me speak?" she questioned half sobbingly.

"I thought it was Tom"—

"I love Tom—as a brother." She clung still closer. "Men are so stupid."

"But, child, I fear I do you wrong. I'm growing old; I'm always helpless, blind"—

"I love you, only you. Blossom, just pretend I am Miss Arabella and—hold me close; it comforts—lots."

And Blossom, stooping, kissed her on the mouth.

If There Is A Weak Spot

In Your System or a Faltering Organ It Will be Worse at This Time of Year

Vigor and Energy Run Low in Spring Unless You Use

DR. CHASE'S NERVE FOOD

It may be the stomach, the heart, the lungs, the filtering or excretory organs, but if there is a weak point it is likely to show up at this time of year.

The blood is thin and watery. It fails to supply proper nourishment. The all-essential nerve force is lacking, and you feel the effects first in your weakest organ.

Your trouble may take the form of indigestion, you may have neuralgia or twinges of sciatic rheumatism. The cause is the same—weak blood.

Dr. Chase's Nerve Food will help you as nothing else can, because it supplies in condensed and easily assimilated form the elements which are necessary for the strengthening and invigorating of the various organs of the body.

Every dose of this great restorative organ goes to form new, red corpuscles in the blood—to make the blood rich and red. The faltering organs resume their functions, appetite improves, digestion becomes good, and gradually new energy and vigour find their way to every nook and corner of the body. To keep strong and well this spring use Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, 50 cents a box, 6 for $2.50 at all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto.

The White Whale.

In the northern seas and many of the rivers is found the white whale, or the arctic beluga. The creatures are quite common in certain localities, and especially at certain seasons of the year. They are pure white in color and quite handsome, darting swiftly about in the cold, clear waters of the northern rivers. An ordinary specimen measures from 10 to 16 feet in length, and has a large muzzle-like mouth, filled with long, sharp teeth, with which it snaps up its fish food very quickly. It swims very rapidly by doubling its tail beneath its body and striking backward with a powerful stroke, which sends it forward fast enough to overtake most all the fish in those northern waters.

The natives capture them in nets and with harpoons. The flesh is used as food in certain seasons, and a very fine grade of oil is rendered from it. The skins are prepared and tanned into leather, which is often sold as the hide of the porpoise.

"Books of Martyrs."

The withdrawal from the sale by auction of the Bunyan copy of "Foxe's Books of Martyrs" reminds us that Cobbett in his "History of the Reformation savagely attacks Fox and his work, and in one instance at least Cobbett seems to prove his case. Here is the excerpt:—"As a proof of Fox's total disregard of truth, there was in the next reign a Protestant parson, as Anthony Wood (a Protestant) tells us, who in a sermon related, on the authority of Fox, that a Catholic of the name of Grimwood had been, as Fox said, a great enemy of the Gospellers, had been punished by a judgment of God,' and that his bowells fell out of his body.' Grimwood was not only alive at the time when the sermon was preached, but happened to be present in the church, and he brought an action of defamation against the preacher!" The circumstances will be found in Athenae Oxonienses, Ed. Bliss, ii., 789.

"That milk looks as if it were half water," protested the woman at the kitchen door.

"It is much more than that, ma'am," replied the milkman, a college graduate in reduced circumstances. "I guarantee it to be 90 per cent. water, 4 per cent. butter, 3 1-2 per cent. casein and 6 1-2 per cent. sugar and various salts, the combination resulting in the liquid commonly known as milk. Chemical analysis of the same cheerfully furnished whenever desired. Good morning, ma'am."

My Pew.

The recent death of Mrs. Ware, widow of the Bishop of Barrow-in-Furness, reminds a correspondent of an amusing experience which that lady had. Her mother, the late Mrs. Goodwin, and she entered a North country church in a place where they happened to be strangers to the majority of the congregation. They were directed to a well-cushioned pew occupied by a fashionably dressed woman. The entry of the ladies excited the wrath of the occupant, and in a tone more forcible than elegant she insisted on them clearing out. They needed no second bidding, and repaired to another part of the church where they could sit undisturbed. After the service, some one acquainted with the identity of the strangers approached the irate pew owner. "Do you know who those ladies were who wanted to sit in your pew?" "No; they were nobody in particular, I'm sure." "Oh! well, one was the wife of the Bishop of Carlisle, and the other, her daughter, the wife of Bishop of Barrow-in-Furness."—Yorkshire Post.

Ready For All-Comers.

Mr. Clement Edwards, M.P., who triumphantly survived a stormy scene at a meeting at Tonypandy, in the Rhondda strike area, recently, was lionised at the British House of Commons two days later. From lunch till tea he "held court" on the terrace and spent the time in receiving the congratulations of confreres and giving demonstrations of the famous "knee-dip" — a wrestling throw — by which he saved an awkward situation.

He hurled an intruder from the platform, and when the police arrived, some seventy strong, he assured them "It is all right; we can manage this affair ourselves." When he found himself outside the hall Mr. Edwards saw that, in addition to the police, the military had been called out! A lane was formed for him through the crowd, but he refused the proffered protection, and mingled with the crowd.

CONCERNING THE MOON

An Interesting Bit of Canadian Folk-lore by E. McCulloch

Evelina McCulloch, Ridgetown, Ontario, contributes the following bit of interesting folklore:

A new moon high in the north sky portends a cold month.

A new moon low in the south sky portends a hot month.

A new moon straight up so that the hunter may not hang his powder horn on it denotes a dry moon, for he may safely hunt that month.

Vice versa, a moon lying flat, on which corner the hunter may hang his powder horn is a wet moon, and rain can be counted upon.

A red moon denotes heat and drouth.

A yellow moon, storms, especially wind.

A clear, white moon, clear weather.

When the moon changes from one quarter to another, a change of weather is looked for.

A large circle around the moon denotes a storm as many days off as there are visible stars inside the circle.

A far-off circle denotes a near-by storm.

If you catch the first glimpse of a new moon over your right shoulder and wish without looking away you will have good fortune all that moon and obtain your wish; also, vice versa, seeing the moon over your left shoulder is not good luck.

All signs fail in a drouth.

A harvest moon stays full two nights.

A hunter's moon follows the harvest moon.

The moon shining on one's face sleeping causes insanity. This is carefully observed among old nurses.

Certain phases of the moon affect our moods and dispositions.

Insane people are perceptibly worse in certain phases of the moon.

Pork killed in the advance of the moon will not shrink in the frying, while that killed in the waning of the moon will shrink while cooking.

Potatoes should be planted in the full of the moon when stems are hol-

To cut or burn the ends of one's hair in new moon systematically for some months will insure a heavy, luxurious growth of hair.

The ancients reckoned time and events by the phases of the moon and the moons in succession.

The moon and the phase of the moon we are born under determine not only our characteristics, disposition, etc., but our capabilities and achievements. These are determined with the signs of the zodiac corresponding.

People born under certain moon conditions are susceptible to those conditions as they reoccur.

Many sailors and fishermen guide their expeditions by the moon.

If you cut Canada thistles in the full of the moon. No other time. low, it succeeds in killing them outright.

LONG DISTANCE EXPERIMENT

A very successful experiment in long-distance telephoning was carried out the other day between Paris and Aberdeen. Communication between the two cities was established by way of London, Dover, and Calais, says the Daily Chronicle Paris correspondent. The Paris international exchange called up the local office of the Daily Chronicle, and switched it one to Aberdeen. Despite the long distance—a matter of 1,000 miles or so—it was possible to hear quite distinctly and without any buzzing.

GLASS FROM SLAG

Slag obtained from various ironworks in England is being made into glass by a concern in Liverpool. Proportions of sand and sulphate of soda, and in some instances a little lime, are put into the blast furnace, converting the ordinary slag into a glass that is available for slates, paving-blocks, bricks, and tiles. It is said that slates can be manufactured at less than half the expense of Welsh slate. They have a polished appearance, and can be made in any size and shape, and in many colors.

STOP STREET CRIES

In fulfilment of a promise to a dying patient, Dr. C. Fenwick, of Thornton Heath, recently called the attention of the Croydon Council to the nuisance of street cries to persons ill in bed. In consequence a new by-law has been adopted imposing a penalty of $25 where any offender refuses to desist.

LIGHTS OF THE OCEAN

The number of lighthouses and lightships in the world, not including the inland bodies of water, such as the Great Lakes, is 15,234. Of this number, 12,171 are on the Atlantic, 2,288 on the Pacific, 677 on the Indian Ocean, and 88 in the Polar seas.

A BABY SUPERSTITION

In the annual report of the Medical Officer of Health for Stepney it is stated that there is a curious objection on the part of some women to weigh their babies. It is often their firm belief that if a baby is weighed it will die before it is a year old.

Sickness is usually caused by the accumulation of waste matter and impurities within the body.

SIGNIFICANCE OF RINGS

The Ring at First Was Placed on the Bride's Thumb

According to the ancient ritual in marriage, the husband began the ring business by placing it upon the bride's thumb and putting it successively on the next two fingers, pronouncing for each one a personal of the Trinity; with a final amen when the fourth finger was reached, and there the ring remained.

The Greek Church ritual directs that the ring be placed upon the right hand. Puritan influence sought to abolish the ring as a vain and heathen emblem, but the sweet old fashion of giving and taking emblem, "for our love's sake," yet remains to us.

Betrothal or engagement rings vary in fashion nowadays, and always depend, or should, on the purse of the donor. Where there are no limitations of this sort, his taste, if it be perfect, will lead him to choose a diamond solitaire, and of the best he can afford, a small and pure blue-white stone being altogether preferable to a large stone. Some prefer a ring set with three stones, generally a sapphire set between two diamonds. Others select a ruby or an emerald, which signifies promise of happiness.

Few persons choose pearls for an engagement ring, as pearls are supposed to typify tears. They are also too perishable to become emblems of love, which, in its first glow at least, is always understood to be indestructible. Their beauty is very precarious, being dimmed or "aged," as the lapidary expresses it, by contact with impure air, while acid annihilates them completely.

A Busy Soldier

Sergeant-Major Quince, formerly of the Prince of Wales' Own Norfolk Artillery Militia, whose funeral took place at Norwich the other day, had rescued 24 persons from drowning and recruited 3,000 men for the Regular Army.

The Ban on Whiskey

"No intoxicants" was endorsed on the invitation cards issued by Mr. William George, brother of the Chancellor of the Exchequer, to the members of the Carnarvonshire County Council for a luncheon at Pwllheli recently.

No Moss on Thayer

John Adam Thayer, a well-known New York publisher, once declared at a dinner that when he was a printer he used to change his job six or seven times a year. "I always bettered myself," says Mr. Thayer. "I always advanced my pay a dollar or more by every change. I remember a Boston foreman who said to me, when I told him I was leaving for Chicago, 'Well, I suppose you will get a job out there, but remember, boy, a rolling stone gathers no moss.' 'Moss, sir, I replied, 'is for ruins.'"

A SPORTING PRINCE

Polo and hockey player, cyclist, motorist, yachtsman, and steeplechase rider, the German Crown Prince is steadily acquiring a reputation as an all-round sportsman. An enthusiastic admirer, indeed, has predicted that he will make the German nation the first sporting people in the world. The Prince has had many adventures and curious experiences, and only a few months ago, during his visit to India, while on a motoring tour from Lucknow, lost his way completely. Eventually his car broke down in the wilds, and he had to return to civilization by means of a devious cross-country journey by boat, carrier, and rail, having meanwhile missed an important official fête which had been organized in his honor.

About Actresses

Ellen Terry was one day talking about the many women who asked her to help them get on the stage, when she said: "Every woman under thirty imagines that she is an actress. And every actress believes that she is under thirty."

THE RIVER CLYDE

A Few Notes About the Most Wonderful Waterway in the World

The Clyde is one of the most important shipbuilding districts in the world. Between Glasgow and Greenock there are about fifty shipyards, and their aggregate output has on two occasions exceeded 600,000 tons. During the last twenty years the total has rarely been less than 400,000 tons, and has frequently exceeded 500,000. Two Super-Dreadnoughts are at present under construction on the river, besides several cruisers and torpedo destroyers; and some of the most notable liners afloat, including the Lusitania, have been built and launched from the banks of the narrow waterway. The River Clyde is one of the most wonderful waterways in the world, particularly that part of it which extends from Greenock up to Glasgow bridge, a distance of nearly twenty miles. At one time, a few hundred years ago, it was possible for pedestrians to cross the river at various points without wetting a shoe. To-day, between the points named there is a uniform depth of nearly twenty feet at low water.

Needless to say this great change has not been effected without a tremendous amount of forethought, skill and determination. As far back as 1566, detachments of the city's inhabitants were employed to clear away a formidable sandbank about two miles above Dumbarton, but although the people labored away for several weeks their efforts had little effect. The river continued to wash down the sand from the upper reaches, and the bank became as formidable as ever. It was about this time that a then well-known civil engineer was consulted as to the best method of making the river navigable for shipping. He informed the city authorities that it would be impossible to deepen the river, his theory being that as the bed of the river was deepened the water level would fall correspondingly.

Fortunately, the authorities did not allow themselves to be seriously influenced by this expert's opinion. After several more ineffective attempts had been made to solve the problem, a civil engineer from Chester, in 1768, experimented on a system of contracting the river by means of jetties, and removing the sand and gravel from within the narrow channel. In 1773, he contracted with the town council to make the river from Dumbuck upwards a depth of six feet and a width of 300 feet at low water, at a cost of $9,200. He succeeded in giving a depth of ten inches more than he bargained for, and he was rewarded by the town council with an additional sum of $6,000 and a silver cup. That may be said to have been the beginning of the great work of widening and deepening the river, a work which has been proceeding almost incessantly ever since.

THE PATAGONIAN INDIANS

Normally the Patagonian Indians are a peacable and kindly people, yet they are impulsive, capable of strong prejudices, very revengeful, and—often with good reason—suspicious of strangers. They are not to be trifled with, and when under the influence of drink are brutal and dangerous. They show love for their children and wives and kindness to their own people. They are divided into numerous tribes or groups, each having its chief, or cacique, upon whom the burdens of government rest but lightly. The cacique of the tribe to whom this village belonged was then at another camp. They believe in a good and an evil spirit, whom they propitiate, and have many stories, myths, and superstitions connected with the sun, moon, and stars, while the slaying of horses and drinking of blood form a conspicuous part in their superstitions, birth, marriage and death ceremonies, many of which are most repulsive.

VEGETABLES AND CHARACTER

According to a French doctor, the potato develops in the eater an evenness of temper and calmness of thought. The carrot acts as a stimulant to the character, and is recommended for billousness and to peevish or jealous persons. Spinach develops ambitious dreams and energy. Peas, we can understand, are not calculated to help serious thought, and the cauliflower induces egotism.

DAWN IN THE FOREST

Edith Willis Linn.

Like a grey nun across the eastern hills
The dawn creeps slowly, in her hand a star.
The forest stirs to greet her, faint and far
Pulses the music that the vastness fills.
In cloistered columns stands the pine that shrills
Beneath her breath, while like some gate ajar,
That shadows and the silences nib
The night swings backward as the new day wills.
Above the murmur of dim forest ways
Rises a paean—music's very own—
Clear as the pealing of a convent bell
So sad, so sweet—like love lost or outgrown;—
The forest-loving songsters' matin praise,
In silvery tones repeating, 'All is well!'

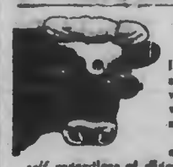
The Tenderfoot Farmer



It was one of these experimental farmers, who put green spectacles on his cow and fed her shavings. His theory was that it didn't matter what the cow ate so long as she was fed. The questions of digestion and nourishment had not entered into his calculations.

It's only a "tenderfoot" farmer that would try such an experiment with a cow. But many a farmer feeds himself regardless of digestion and nutrition. He might almost as well eat shavings for all the good he gets out of his food. The result is that the stomach grows "weak" the action of the organs of digestion and nutrition are impaired and the man suffers the miseries of dyspepsia and the agonies of nervousness.

To strengthen the stomach, restore the activity of the organs of digestion and nutrition and brace up the nerves, use Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It is an infallible remedy, and has the confidence of physicians as well as the praise of thousands healed by its use.

In the strictest sense "Golden Medical Discovery" is a temperance medicine. It contains neither intoxicants nor narcotics, and is free from alcohol as from opium, cocaine and other dangerous drugs. All ingredients printed on its outside wrapper.

Don't let a dealer delude you for his own profit. There is no medicine for stomach, liver and blood "just as good" as "Golden Medical Discovery."

$1,425 IS ANNUAL 'BEAUTY BILL' OF ENGLISH WOMEN

London Specialist Gives This as Reasonable Sum To Be Expended.

CAN BE BEAUTIFUL ON $500 A YEAR

Bond Street Shop Has Men Customers Who Spend $2.50 a Day for Water Softeners.

[Special Despatch.]
London, Saturday.

"FOREIGN visitors to England are sometimes heard to remark upon the bloom of the English woman's cheeks, and wonder if it is derived as entirely from an open air life as it is frequently said to be.

"If so, beauty specialists of London are able to throw a new light on the subject. They say the London woman may be as beautiful as girl may wish for $500 a year, but that $1,425 to $5,000 may be spent for more elaborate treatment and more expensive association.

The revived interest in this subject is due to a Chicago woman, who is quoted as having said that her bill of $1,500 a year for beauty culture is a modest expenditure.

"The average English woman spends considerably less money on making herself beautiful than the American, French or Viennese," said a Bond street beauty specialist. "So clients from both sides of the Atlantic, because she uses more hygienic means and dispenses with artificial helps, such as rouges, chin straps, face masks and other devices to develop her figure by unnatural means." I think that the Chicago woman says she pays for face powders is an impossible sum to spend on powder—ever here at any rate. The English woman's greatest expenditure is in obtaining water softeners.

"Many of my clients spend $1.50 a day on water softeners, and I have men customers who spend as much as $2.50 a day in this way."

A year's beauty bill of a reasonable amount spent by wealthy women in London is about as follows:—

Toilet requisites	$200
Perfumes	125
Powders, creams and face lotions	125
Night washes and tooth powders	25
Manicure and polish of the nails, chiropody and polish	250
Electrolysis	50
Face blanching, one treatment weekly	150
Total	$1,425

The above figures, however, do not include operations; and, according to a fashionable West End hairdresser, wealthy English women often spend from $250 to $500 a year on their hair and hair dressing.

WOMEN'S GOWNS WILL COST MORE

Leading London Dressmakers Predict Dresses Will Be More Beautiful and Expensive.

[Special Despatch.]
London, Saturday.

"MORE beautiful—but more costly—than ever!"

This is the prediction of leading dressmakers on designs for women's dress that will be the vogue in the coming autumn and winter. Beautiful materials are now being prepared for evening dresses of an entirely new design that cost $25 and $40 a yard.

"Rich and wonderful brocades, tissues and very fine materials are to be used," says one of the leading modistes in the west end of London. "All materials costing from $5 to $10 a yard means that dresses will cost more money than ever, and frocks made of the new materials for the autumn will cost about $250 more than the summer dresses."

Is the slim figure to disappear in favor of frills and wide skirts? This is a question that women are asking at present, and dreadful rumors of early Victorian fashions are being whispered. They are also asking will the "bobble," the tight skirt and "tube" modes become a shadowy phantasy relegated to the past, and the silhouette of woman, with her wide skirt, draped frocks, bolstered and bebilliated, be entirely changed? Anyway, a revolution in fashions is predicted.

SEEK A CAREER, SAYS LADY BERYL

Daughter of Lord Clancarty Disapproves of Young Women Idling Their Lives Away.

[Special Despatch.]
London, Saturday.

LADY BERYL DE PAER TRENCH, daughter of Lord Clancarty, says she wants a career and advises all young women to cultivate a like ambition. A young woman of strong individuality, she inherits much of the good looks of her late mother and was one of the most admired debutantes when she made her curtsey to the King and Queen.

Lady Beryl says she disapproves of wealthy girls idling their lives away. Those who know this enterprising débutante consider that she has dramatic talent, but Lord Clancarty and her pretty young stepmother do not approve of the stage as a career.

King George to Cull His Racing Stable; Many Horses to Go Under the Hammer

LORD MARCUS BERESFORD. KING GEORGE. MR. RICHARD MARSH.

Believes Majority of the Animals Are Not Worth Their Keep.

WILL BREED OTHERS

One or Two Good Mares Will Be Added to the Royal Stud at Sandringham.

[Special Despatch.]
London, Saturday.

KING GEORGE has decided upon extensive alterations in the royal racing stable as at present maintained, and few of the horses now in the care of Mr. Richard Marsh, at Egerton House, Newmarket, will be seen carrying the royal colors next season. Both the King and Lord Marcus Beresford, the manager of the royal stud, are of the opinion that the majority of these horses are not worth their keep, and in this Mr. Marsh concurs.

It is stated that there are a few good yearlings in the paddocks at Sandringham that may "come on" for next year, but of the twenty-one horses now maintained at Newmarket by the King most will go under the hammer when the autumn sales are held at headquarters. The King purposes to visit Newmarket in company with Lord Marcus Beresford, in order to discuss the future of the royal stud. It is known that the King is opposed to the leasing of race horses, preferring to breed his own, and one or two good mares will soon be purchased in his behalf to strengthen the Sandringham stud farm. Next year, it is understood, the King is not likely to have more than half a dozen horses in training.

THE PRINCE A MIDSHIPMAN.

The Prince of Wales is the only member of the royal family who is not making holiday just now, for he is serving as a midshipman on board H. M. S. Hindustan. It is not, however, the King's intention that his eldest son shall make the navy his profession, as in a few months, probably three at the utmost, he will leave the Hindustan and join a crack cavalry regiment—not the Tenth Hussars, which was his father's regiment, but the Eighteenth Hussars, the special ground for this choice being that it is his mother's regiment, "Queen Mary's Own."

Since the investiture of the Prince of Wales his correspondence has become considerable. It includes letters from all sorts and conditions of people from various parts of the world. There are begging letters, requests for his patronage, documents from enterprising companies asking him to invest and letters from philanthropists seeking assistance for their pet schemes. A considerable part of the correspondence comes from America. As a matter of fact none of these letters ever reaches the Prince, the bulk going straight up to the wastepaper basket.

The Prince is said to have a fancy for letter writing, and has some power of description, but his outlook is strangely solemn for so young a boy. It was the venerable Prince Christian, who has seen his eightieth birthday, who exclaimed on receipt of birthday congratulations from the Prince, "Oh, the solemnity of the boy!"

SHOWERED WITH HONORS.

As soon as the Prince was made a Knight of the Garter several European sovereigns expressed a desire to bestow decorations upon him. King George, however, made a general request that these proposed honors should be postponed for a time until his son is a little older.

One of the first of the foreign honors to be handed to the Prince will be the Black Eagle of Prussia. The Kaiser would have handed this to him when he was in England last May had it not been for the request of the King. Other orders which the Prince will belong are the Golden Fleece of Spain, St. Andrew of Russia and St. Stephen of Austria.

He will not be admitted member to the Order of the Thistle or the Knights of St. Patrick for some years. Next year Prince Albert will be made a Knight of the Garter. There is to be no formal chapter for the admission of the Duke of Fife and the Duke of Argyll. Both these will receive the insignia privately from the King.

LIFE OF KING EDWARD.

The Duke of Argyll is to undertake the onerous task of compiling the authoritative life of King Edward. The Duke is now conferring with King George on the subject, and the work will receive the King's personal attention during his forthcoming visit to Balmoral. The Duke has given to the world a Life of Queen Victoria, and it is considered appropriate that he should become the biographer of her son.

He is a voluminous author. His edition of the Psalms in verse was pronounced by the Athenaeum to be the best in existence. He also published works on the United States and Canada.

Invercauld, where Rear Admiral Beatty and his wife will have many shooting parties this autumn, is said to be the most expensive house in Scotland to lease. This is because of its proximity to Balmoral. In discussing the attractions of the house recently a gillie remarked to an American inquirer:—"It is cheap at the price; a thousand pounds for the shooting and a thousand for the house and a thousand for the 'proxeemety' to Balmoral."

An engagement which has given much satisfaction to society in Ireland is that of Sir Francis Lambart to Miss Kathleen Moore-Brabazon, a sister of Mr. Moore-Brabazon. Sir Francis is very popular. His two sisters, Lady Legge and Mrs. Thomas Collins, were great favorites of the late Queen Victoria, to whom they were maids of honor. They are noted for their wit. They are very graceful dancers.

HAS CAST 10,000 BOTTLES ON SEA

Captain Simpson Says They Are Now Coming Back at the Rate of Three a Week.

[Special Despatch.]
London, Saturday.

SOME interesting stories about the velocity and peculiarities of ocean drifts and currents are told by Captain Alexander Simpson, who is a fellow of the Royal Geographical Society and who in the last twenty-six years has been making experiments in that direction with bottles.

The Captain says that during all these years he has thrown overboard nearly ten thousand bottles with messages enclosed. Nearly one thousand bottles have been returned to him from all parts of the world, and he receives them at present at the rate of about three a week.

"One of the most interesting drifts," said Captain Simpson, "and one of the longest was by a bottle put overboard 146 miles southwest of Capetown, which was picked up four and one-half years afterward on the Shetland Islands. Another put overboard east-southeast of St. Helena reached the Norwegian coast in a somewhat shorter time. These bottles are carried by the southeast trade winds toward Cape San Roque on the Brazilian coast, and passing through the West Indian Islands make the circuit of the Gulf of Mexico. Under the influence of the Gulf Stream they are deposited on European shores.

"Ten bottles put overboard in the vicinity of Cape Horn were picked up off the southern coasts of Australia after journeys from ten to twelve thousand miles at an average daily rate of ten miles, while bottles put overboard within twenty degrees south of the equator in the Atlantic and Indian oceans make an average drift of eighteen to twenty-two miles daily to the west and northwest."

LONDON ENJOYING EXCELLENT GROUSE

West End Game Dealer Says Not a Trace of Disease Has Been Found in Birds.

[Special Despatch.]
London, Saturday.

GROUSE figured prominently on the menus of London hotels and restaurants at luncheon, dinner and supper on the opening day of the season, though, owing to the labor troubles, game dealers were disappointed in their stocks arriving very late, many not receiving any at all.

Messrs Bellamy Brothers, however, were among the fortunate ones. Mr. William Bellamy, the head partner, told a newspaper correspondent that he had received a fine supply of excellent Yorkshire grouse.

"Fine birds," he said. "I never saw. Not a trace of disease is to be found among any of them. We examine all birds carefully before we send them out, and all are very well feathered on the leg. When they are not well feathered, we know there is something suspicious about them, but all are beautiful, healthy birds.

"Grouse have evidently not suffered in the least by the long spell of drought, which it was feared in some quarters might have affected them. Scotch grouse are mostly preferred by connoisseurs. They are smaller than the Yorkshire grouse, but have more flavor, which is accounted for through their feeding entirely on the heather."

Best young birds sold in London at 18s a brace, inferior birds at 12s., old birds at 6s. and cold storage birds at 3s. a brace. In Scotland they were much cheaper, best grouse selling at 10s. and 12s. a brace.

On the Hohenzollerns.

St. Louis Post-Dispatch: Mr Morgan and the Kaiser were smoking a cigar on the imperial yacht.

"Mr. Morgan," said Wilhelm, "what do you think of European finance?"

The big banker contemplated the blue sea and a droll look gathered about his eyes.

"I think it is all Rothschild's play," he said.

LONDON 'PUB' FOR SABBATH HOLIDAY

Legal Regulations Permit Open Saloons, but Require Pleasure Parks To Be Closed

[Special Despatch.]
London, Saturday.

FROM one o'clock until three in the afternoon and from six o'clock until eleven every Sunday evening all the "public houses" in London are wide open and filled in many instances by wretched men and still more wretched women, which probably explains why there is so much poverty in the world's metropolis.

But while the London "bobby" looks on unconcernedly at the poor wasting their substance over the bars he will be quick to arrest any man who dares to violate the Sabbath by permitting a "merry-go-round" to revolve in an amusement resort.

London has its White City, with hundreds of innocent devices to please the children, and the same may be said of Earl's Court and the Crystal Palace, but not a wheel can turn in these places on the Sabbath day; and so the children of the poor must be content to remain at home in the sordid atmosphere of the slums, because the law, which takes no account of men and women who become grossly intoxicated on Sunday, provides for the punishment by fine, imprisonment or revocation of license of any amusement purveyor who dares to outrage public sentiment by permitting any child to enjoy on Sunday the innocent pleasures that are provided at these inland Coney Islands in London.

It is true that a sentiment here is growing against the ultra-Sabbatarians, who insist upon all the pleasure resorts being closed, but who haven't a word to say against the public houses. There is not the slightest exaggeration in the statement that seventy-five per cent of the "pubs" of London are dirty, disease-breeding traps, but they are permitted to remain wide open, while the purists insist on keeping every amusement resort tightly closed.

Just as in America, where working boys are forced into the back rooms of saloons because the over-righteous will not permit baseball playing or any other popular outdoor exercise, so in England cricket, the national game, is tabooed on Sunday, and the only recreation of boyhood is to join the great army that finds relaxation in a decorous walk up Fleet street and through the parks or to join the still larger crowd that spends its time and money in the "pubs."

The attitude of the law toward Sunday amusements in England reminds one of the unco' guid Scotchwoman who knew only one great crime—whistling on the Sabbath.

AMERICAN PRAISES NEW YORK POLICE

Thinks the "Bluecoats" and Firemen in American Metropolis Superior to London Men.

[Special Despatch.]
London, Saturday.

MR. ROBERT ADAMSON, secretary to Mayor Gaynor, of New York, and Mrs. Adamson were in London for a week, where they were interested spectators of the recent Carlton Hotel fire, and this gave Mr. Adamson a chance to compare the work of London's "bobbies" and firemen with that of "the finest" and "the bravest" in New York.

"I don't wish to be considered as criticising the London police or firemen, for whom I have great admiration," said Mr. Adamson to your London correspondent, "but I couldn't help thinking that the crowd that surrounded the hotel would have been much better handled by New York policemen.

"The firemen impressed me as a bit slower than our firemen and there seemed to be a great deal of confusion. The Salvage Corps, I am told, did excellent work, but with due respect for the London 'bobbies' and their splendid control of the traffic situation, I think the New York policeman is smarter in every other way, and it is only a question of time when the uplifted finger of a Broadway 'bluecoat' will be as potential in halting and directing traffic as that of the London 'bobby' is here to-day.

"By the way, speaking purely as a New Yorker, I must say that there has been a tremendous improvement in the police force of our city during the last five years. The men that are joining the force now are better physically and brighter mentally than the 'old timers.'

"I think the day is rapidly approaching, if it is not here, when in addition to their reputation for bravery the police of New York will be as noted for their courtesy as are the 'bobbies' of London, and that is high praise, indeed, as the average London policeman is one of the politest men in England."

In talking of his trip across on board the Mauretania, when bankers, brokers and statesmen saw a clever boxing match, Mr. Adamson said he noted that a trip aboard a liner had an odd effect on politicians. In New York, for instance, Mr. J. Sergeant Cram, Governor Dix's appointee on the Public Service Board, is always, figuratively and politically speaking, at the throat of Mr William R. Wilcox, the republican chairman of that body. On board the Mauretania they were constant, cheery companions.

"And I understand," said Mr. Adamson, "that Mr. Wilcox is now enjoying the grouse shooting at Mr. Cram's box in Scotland. Isn't it funny what a difference an ocean trip makes?"

Mr. and Mrs. Adamson left London for France for an automobile tour in the ——

IN STOCKING FET, SHE WINS A RACE

Lady Diana Manners Arouses Admiration of King Alfonso at a Merry Garden Party.

[Special Despatch.]
London, Saturday.

ROYAL parties are usually recognized as functions at which the most strict etiquette must be observed, but wherever the young and light hearted King of Spain goes he inspires everybody with the spirit of fun. Since he came to England he has been enjoying every minute of his holiday, and one of the maddest, merriest parties in which royalty ever took part was the gymkhana given by the Duke and Duchess of Westminster at the visit of the King and Queen of Spain to Eaton Hall.

Lords and ladies played children's games with zest and vigor. One amusing event was a dismounting race, in which mounted men raced to a waiting lady, and the pair then ran hand in hand for the winning post. It was an event for which Lady Diana Manners, the young and pretty daughter of the Duke of Rutland, had been holding herself in reserve. Lady Diana is a bright, slimly built girl, lithe and graceful as a wood nymph.

"I'm going to win this race," she announced publicly. Then she sat down on the grass, removed her shoes and did a preliminary sprint in her stocking feet, to the intense admiration of King Alfonso.

Lady Diana took up her position like a professional sprinter—knees bent, fingers touching the turf. When her partner, Lord Castlereagh, leaped from his horse she sprang into graceful action and, running like Atalanta, passed the post an easy winner by a dozen yards.

King Alfonso had an interesting and perplexing five minutes with a blue parasol belonging to the Princess Pless. It was a patent affair, and the stock came away in his hands.

"I'll mend it," said the King, confidently; but he did not. He did everything but mend it. He loosened the wires, beat the stock and finished up by turning the parasol inside out.

"Now you've done it!" said the Princess. "Looks like it," replied King Alfonso ruefully; "but I did my best anyhow."

There was more fun in what was called the "Lloyd-Lindsay" competition, which consisted of a team of four men, who had to ride to a given spot and try to knock over champagne bottles with polo balls. They rode all right, but when it came to hitting the bottles the fun began. The throws were desperate and erratic, and, led by Queen Ena, the delighted women kept up a running fire of biting comment.

"Hurrah, well done!" cried the Queen when a Guardsman nearly hit a groom.

"Change the bowling," advised Lady Diana, an enthusiastic cricketer.

The hostess, the Duchess of Westminster, and Lord Castlereagh distinguished themselves in the "Gretna Green" stakes, the fact that the Duchess rode astride giving her great advantage over her rivals.

RADIUM INSTITUTE OPENS IN LONDON

Both the Wealthy and the Poor Receive Exactly Similar Treatment in This Hospital.

[Special Despatch.]
London, Saturday.

A HOSPITAL containing not a dose of medicine or a surgeon's knife has just been opened in London. The new Radium Institute, in Riding House street, the second radium hospital in the world, was its existence to the suggestion of the late King Edward.

Apart from the necessary apparatus, the sole stock in trade of this new building consists of a few blackish specks of a mysterious substance which could easily be placed on a watch glass.

More than thirty persons suffering from various skin diseases visited the institute in the opening day, were interviewed and in some cases treated with radium rays by Mr. A. E. Hayward Pinch, F.R.C.S., the medical superintendent.

Poor patients, who pay nothing, and paying patients have separate apartments, but both wealthy and poor receive exactly similar attention. Mr. Pinch showed a visitor a tiny flat silver tray filled with varnish, under which could be seen a few minute black specks.

"There is $5,250 worth of radium there," he said, "but to estimate the total value of radium in this building is practically impossible. It has been estimated at between $250,000 and $375,000 by various authorities."

MYSTERY SHIPS ARE SEIZED IN ENGLAND

[Special Despatch.]
London, Saturday.

The English press is worked up to fever heat by the government's seizure of two English gun laden mystery steamships the Foam Queen, in the Thames, and the Arizona, at Vicker's Wharf, at Barrow.

The general belief is that they were to serve as gun runners for Portugal or Venezuela, as another gun laden English steamship is known to have cleared for the latter country a week ago.

Meanwhile the seizures have taken the place, as a theme of discussion, of the strikers. Mr. Lloyd-George's insurance bill and Morocco.

The vessels were intended, according to the Daily Mail, for South America, and were seized on information being received from a South American republic which is always either in trouble or expecting Richard Croker Regrets That Anti-Racing Legislation Throws Thousands Out of Work.

[Special Despatch.]
London, Saturday.

MR. R. BRADLEY is in Ireland hoping for a chance of finding engagements for his big stable of thoroughbreds, made useless by the drastic anti-racing legislation in the United States. He is the guest of Mr. Richard Croker, at Doncairn, and will come over to study racing outlook in England before returning to the United States.

Many other American owners, personally or through agents, are examining the racing situation in Europe with a view to utilizing their big stables over here.

Unfortunately, however, as Mr. Croker said yesterday, this will not help the thousands of men thrown out of work by "attacks on freedom in the land of the free."

GET OPERA SEAT BY WIRELESS

Mr. Oscar Hammerstein Installs Plant on Theatre for Convenience of Voyagers.

[Special Despatch.]
London, Saturday.

IT is now Mr. Oscar Hammerstein, M.P. No, he hasn't entered Parliament; he is simply a Master of Publicity. Everything that the one time American impresario does is duly chronicled in the London newspapers. In fact, he who was once New York's Oscar is so full of original ideas that all of the London dailies have assigned men to visit him night, noon and morning, as when the impresario's "think tank" is working it is dangerous to overlook him.

Mr. Hammerstein's latest is the installation of a wireless plant on the top of his new London opera house, by means of which it will be possible for those who go down to or come back from the seven seas ships to engage seats at the opera house while still on the ocean blue.

Of course, you have heard of Mr. Hammerstein's famous artesian well. He started a contractor digging this three months ago, but so far without result. However, Oscar says, it is for the contractor to dig or die, and he holds on in the hope that if the digger does not strike water he may strike oil.

Mr. Hammerstein is determined to give England music. "If they will not accept grand opera from me," said the only one, "they will have to hear my music anyhow. I have purchased a street organ as a warning to England that if grand opera does not appeal to them I will emulate the example of Lord Chelsea—that's close enough—and make them listen."

KING'S CHILDREN GOOD SWIMMERS

[Special Despatch.]
London, Saturday.

The announcement that the King and the Prince of Wales when at Cowes enjoyed a dip in the sea every morning recalls the fact that the King is an enthusiastic swimmer and that all the royal children were taught this art as soon as they were old enough. They learned the rudiments of swimming at the Bath Club, but they gained the larger part of their experience at Snettisham, near Sandringham, on the shores of the Wash, where their grandfather, King Edward, had a bathing pavilion specially built for their use. The Prince of Wales and Prince Albert are expert swimmers and have competed upon several occasions against their fellow cadets at Osborne and Dartmoor. Little Princess Mary is a fine swimmer also. A short time ago the King had under consideration the building of a large indoor swimming tank at Windsor Castle for the use of his children, and it is thought probable that this will be completed very shortly.

Gentlemen—At 144 Simcoe St., rear of Payne's Drug Store, you will find one of the most up-to-date and best run tonsorial parlours in the city. The new proprietor, Mr. Percy Lynch, has had wide experience in some of the best shops on this and the other side, besides a local reputation as a high class workman. One trial will convince you that up-to-date methods bring you greater results for your money than the old-time way. Young fellows want to look just right, and one call will bring you back again, as the service is without equal in the city. A high class barber is employed and Mr. Lynch guarantees everyone prompt attention and careful work regardless of time or numbers. One trial is solicited, the work will do the rest.

ABOUT CELERY

From Farm and Dairy.

D. Dempsey, Perth Co., Ont.

When the celery plants start to grow after they are set in the field we loosen the soil around them and don't allow the soil to bake or dry out during the season of growth. We draw much earth around the plants until they commence blanching. It is well to have the celery well grown before it commences blanching as the slugs and other pests are apt to get into the earth and injure the crop.

I prefer blanching with earth to any other method that I know of for the production of good crisp stock. Before we commence to blanch we have our soil well cultivated between the trenches. Then we use a double mould board scuffler to shove the soil up near the rows. We then get down and use our hands for the first earthing up by grasping the plant in one hand holding so as to keep the soil out of the heart, then draw the soil around the plant with the other hand. In drawing it well up to the plant it will hold it upright so that it will protect the heart in future banking. We keep cultivating and drawing the soil up to the rows every few days till the celery is fit for the table, which is in a few weeks after we commence to earth up.

USE WHEN BLANCHED

This is the time when the celery requires to be watched carefully, and as soon as we get it properly blanched we commence to use it. A great many people are under the impression that if they get celery properly blanched that it will keep in good condition. But it is only a matter of a few weeks at most till the heart begins to throw up the seed stalks and it soon becomes pithy and out of order; especially during the warm weather. But we can hold it back by digging up and trenching in a cool moist place and covering to nearly the top of the stalks.

Here it is that our poor celery comes in. It may be in the best of condition this week and the next week be over-ripened and out of order and it is very often put on the market in this poor condition, and thus injures the sale of good stock. It is better to keep planting at intervals through the early part of the season so as to mature as we require it for summer and fall consumption.

WINTER CELERY

This only applies to the summer celery. For a winter supply we can plant all about the same time, say about the first or second week in July, and cultivate the same as the earlier crop. We do not earth up till the weather becomes cool, and there is danger of frost. We leave it in the trenches as long as possible without danger from heavy frost, then dig up carefully and dress off some of the outer leaves and put into a cool cellar or frost proof building, setting the plants close together in an upright position on a damp earth floor. If in danger of frost cover with dry leaves about four or five inches deep and it will soon blanch up and be fit to use. It can be kept practically all winter in this way.

HONEY

From Farm and Dairy.

A Toronto dealer has sent a circular card headed in large capitals, "Important to Apiarists," to all the honey producers in the country, warning them that "if reciprocity carries extracted honey will be cheaper," and hinting at a vote against the agreement on September 21. Here is how it strikes the Dundalk beekeeper as told in a letter dated Dundalk, August 8, 1911:

"I enclose a card which I received recently. The sender is no doubt concerned, very much concerned, for my welfare, and represents himself as such. He, however, appears strangely indifferent to the interests of his customers in Toronto and elsewhere. I had no knowledge that any such consideration was felt for me as a producer of honey by a stranger who is willing to sacrifice his customers, poor and rich, that my produce may be protected. I expect every honey producer has received the same kind warning. But I can tell him that I am not afraid. I do not fear competition with American honey."

PETERBOROUGH FRIDAY SEPTEMBER 1 1911

"DID YOU EVER HEAR OF A STORE WITH THREE CUSTOMERS REFUSING TO TAKE A FOURTH?" HON. GEO. P. GRAHAM

BIGGEST, BEST AND MOST ENTHUSIASTIC CAMPAIGN MEETING EVER HELD IN THE INTERESTS OF ANY POLITICAL PARTY IN RIDING OF WEST PETERBORO'

A Splendid Audience of Thinking Electors Hear Reasoning, Convincing and Logical Speeches on the Reciprocity Agreement from Hon. Geo. P. Graham, Minister of Railways and Canals; Mr. Hugh Guthrie, K. C., of Guelph; Hon. J. R. Stratton, M.P., and Mr. R. R. Hall, ex-M.P. --Mr. Graham Exposes the Fallacy of the "Let Well Enough Alone" Policy of Mr. Borden and Explodes the Annexation Bogey.

AUDIENCE ENDORSE SPLENDID ARGUMENTS

Speakers Show that the Liberal Party Has Been the Real Loyal Party In Canadian Politics--Mr. Guthrie Explains How the Farmer Will Get More and the Consumer Pay Less--Mr. Stratton's Splendid Speech is Punctuated by Cheers.

It was twenty minutes to eleven when George Graham, Minister of Railways, ceased speaking at the Stratton meeting last night and then came Hugh Guthrie, like a good postscript to a good letter, and spoke half an hour longer.

Mr. Guthrie had motored over from Keene and was just in time to give the finishing touches to one of the most successful meetings ever held in Peterborough. This finishing touch consisted of an old flag peroration that raised the audience to a high pitch of enthusiasm. When Hugh Guthrie gets to be Minister of Justice, he will be a fine upstanding, broad-minded, outspoken one for he believes in saying what he means.

"If actions speaker louder than words," said Mr. Guthrie, "if deeds are better than lip loyalty and flag waving, then Laurier is the best Briton in the Empire, because he has done most for the Empire."

After which Mr. Guthrie remarked that the flag was too sacred an emblem to be used as a grand-stand play, and recited a little poem about the Union Jack, in which the blue figured as the rolling sea, the white as the honour of our land and the red as the blood of our heroes slain. Whereupon the audience demonstrated that everybody in Canada, Grit or Tory, reciprocity or not, is loyal, by cheering itself hoarse.

SENTIMENTS AND FIGURES.

Yes, the advocates of reciprocity can use sentiment too, only they keep it in the right place. They do not believe in wearing their hearts on their sleeves, because that is bad manners, and bad business, but deep down they feel their loyalty to the British Empire, just as keenly as Mr. Borden and his trained flag-wavers. The chief difference between those who follow Mr. Borden in this matter, and those who do not, is that the former colour their sentiment with what figures they may have, while the latter colour their figures with the usual feelings of Canadian and British subjects. It follows that the party which is shortest on argument, is longest on sentiment of the clamorous kind, and that doesn't happen to be the Liberal party.

There was a quiet earnestness about the flags and mottos in the opera house last night. "Canada can not stand still" was the answer to the "Let well enough alone" of the other side. And Canada cannot stand still because the law of human effort is that if a man doesn't go forward he slips back. "Larger Markets Mean Bigger Business" was another motto that showed that this not a political question at all, but a business one. On the back scene of the stage was painted a Union flack banner, with the familliar bull dog superimposed. That means, according to the best reciprocity gospel, that what we have we'll hold and get a little more besides.

THE FLAG KNOWS NO PARTY.

The platform was liberally decorated with flags—the Union Jack, the Canadian ensign, the royal standard, the lion, the unicorn, the rose, the thistle, the shamrock, the maple leaf, in all the usual combinations. There was a picture of the King and Queen, at what the actors call, back centre, with "Long Live the King" under it, and the speakers' table was draped in the Union Jack.

That Union Jack was the motif of the meeting. Its position spoke for itself. England and our native land are the centre of every good citizen's thoughts, and no political party has a monopoly of loyalty to the British Empire.

The brass band and the orchestra played Rule Britannia and God Save the King and the Maple Leaf Forever and O'Canada with just as much gusto as they did a week ago at the Borden meeting, and people cheered these tunes just the same way, and there was no particular difference in the loyal atmosphere except that the Stratton meeting didn't ask the audience to get up on its hind legs at a given signal and wave little flags to help the speaker's faltering conclusions out. There was no organized burst like that. Patriotism and loyalty were allowed to burst as they pleased and they needed no coaxing. Instead of flags, the Stratton meeting gave the audience arguments to carry away.

It was a hair-trigger audience by the way. It answered every joke with a laugh, every good argument with a hear, hear, and every ringing sentiment with a round of applause. It never let a point go by. Its attention was as lively at a quarter after eleven as it was at the start. The chief reason for this was that the speakers had a lot to say and knew how to say it. There is nothing like glad tidings well put.

THE MAN AND THE MEETING

Mr. Stratton was in fine fettle. When he saw a warm audience like that he just threw away his notes and spoke as the spirit moved him. A man generally does better when the spirit moves him, and it moved the candidate to some effect last night. He made a speech that had something for everybody—argument for those who wanted to think, local issues for those who wanted local issues, fighting for those who wanted their blood stirred, and humour for those who wanted to laugh. Particularly did the audience like the way he dressed down that champion of religion, J. H. Burnham. He did it with just the right degree of badinage for it's no sense taking a steam hammer to a butterfly, or using a pile-driver to crush a lady-bug. Next to the Burnham stuff the audience probably liked the neat way in which Mr. Stratton fitted reciprocity into the conditions in Peterborough. It takes a business man to apply his wise saws to modern instances. Set it down for credit, that Mr. Stratton kept his audience interested for an hour and a half.

There were some hecklers in the back of the hall—part of Mr. Burnham's little band. They sat there from seven o'clock to hold their seats, but piled out when Mr. Stratton suggested reading the honour roll of the P—P——Patriots.

DEEDS VERSUS WORDS.

Chairman R. R. Hall followed the custom of all good chairman and made a very short speech. A short speech is harder than a long one, because a man cannot get his stride, but the chairman managed to put quite a lot into his twenty minutes. His speech was mostly concerned with the practical loyalty of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, who gave Great Britain a trade preference in the Canadian tariff which the Conservatives opposed; who sent three Canadian contingents to the South African war to help England, as compared with Sir Charles Tupper's famous "not a man, not a dollar" cablegram on a similar occasion; who started a navy to protect Canadian commerce on the high seas and to assist England if need be, a navy which Mr. Borden's allies, Monk and Bourassa, in Quebec are condemning as too imperialist.

"The British Empire," said Chairman Hall, "is something worth fighting for. England has been the greatest agent of law, order, morals and civilisation in the world. Contrast her colonial policy with that of Rome, which was one of pillage. They gave Julius Caesar a triumph, because he "brought many captives home to Rome, whose ransom doth the general coffers fill." But England's policy is home rule for the colonies. Rome is the lone mother of dead empires, but England is the living mother of great nations, whose she dowers with her free institutions and her inherited gifts of knowledge and experience. Sir Wilfrid Laurier is one of the greatest Empire builders the Empire has ever seen."

OUR FUTURE MEMBER.

You can write it "Hon. J. R. Stratton, M.P., after the ballots are counted. His enthusiastic reception when he rose to address the meeting, showed what a deep and solid place he held in the hearts of the electors of Peterborough—City and Riding. After a little gallant tribute to the many ladies present, Mr. Stratton relieved Mr. Graham of the pleasure of answering the questions posed by the Review, which were what might be expected from that quarter. "Why was Peterborough left without a single water power?" They were being developed in a business way and rates for power were subject to control of the Railway Commission. It was a child's question to ask why the revenues collected in Peterborough were not spent here. The ten cities of Canada furnished the bulk of revenue. If it were all spent in these places there would be none left for the rest of the Dominion." Present Peterborough with two or three dams, free of expense." Without betraying a Departmental secret, he might explain that Mr. Graham was arranging with the Seymour Power Commpany to present Peterborough with 500 to 700 horse power, free of charge—enough to furnish the city with its light. He need not refer to his share in the arrangement to commend himself to Peterborough, and the applause showed that the audience had a little suspicion that Mr. Stratton had done almost as much for Peterborough as his opponent would do, or had done. The interests of Peterborough, in the power matter were safe in the hands of Mr. Graham, with the Railway Commission to regulate rates in the public interest.

AS TO RECIPROCITY.

When Mr. Fielding introduced the reciprocity agreement in the House, every Conservative member pounded his desk in approval. They were doing their own thinking then, and were in favour of the agreement. But the big "interests" said, "No; you must kill this iniquitous plan to do trade with our neighbours." The policy of obstruction adopted in obedience to orders, public business was blocked, and Sir Wilfrid took the wind out of their sails by dissolving the House, and bringing on an election on the issue of the reciprocity agreement. This was a simple, business proposal. We had the home market, the British market, and the agreement provided another market. That was all. The agreement was not the ruin its opponents asserted. The Government thought it would be good for Canada. We could depend upon their judgment. The Government thought they knew what was best for Canada when they readjusted the tariff in the interests of Canadian prosperity, in 1897. Mr. Stratton invited contrast of the industrial and commercial conditions the Conservatives left in 1896, when the people relieved them of the job of governing Canada. Then we had manufacturing and commercial stagnation. Why, here in Peterborough we were on the ragged edge of ruin. The Canadian General Electric Company, whose ten o'clock whistle closes a day's work of thirteen hustling hours, was running on half-time. The Auburn Woollen Mills was on the same schedule. The Lock Works hadn't enough orders to keep them going. How is it now, and why is it so now?

WHAT TARIFF RELIEF DID.

In 1897, the Liberal Government that now proposes to "ruin the country with reciprocity," revised the tariff to give the manufacturer a fair chance. They reduced or removed the duty on the raw material he used. Then the hum of industry began, and has been humming in the key of high G ever since. Prosperity came to country and city. Our factories began to run on full time and over time. Workmen got steady employment at good wages. They were able to have a day or two's potatoes and flour ahead. They could buy from the farmer. The farmer prospered and everybody prospered; everybody got fat on the grub of good government. This was shown in the Customs returns—the barometer of the people's prosperity—of their capacity to buy goods the merchant imports. In the last year of the lean years of Conservative rule, 1896, the customs collected at Peterborough totalled the modest sum of $56,849. In 1911 they were about eight times larger—$440,687. In the same period the Dominion revenue jumped from 36 millions, in 1896, to 117 millions, in 1911, and this with decreased rates of Customs levy. The manufacturers of Canada, thanks to the Government's remission of duty, imported 100 million dollars a year, free of duty—100 millions added to their profits, to be divided among their employees. The population of Peterborough grew from 10,592 in 1896, to its present population of 18,000 again, thanks to the policy of the Government. Would a Government, who had done so much for manufacturers and the working man, put forth a proposal like the reciprocity agreement, if they for one moment thought it would injure any Canadian industry?

A BOUQUET FOR MR. BURNHAM.

A week ago, on this stage, Mr. Burnham favoured voters for the ladies. Mr. Stratton had gone him one better. He had voted for votes for ladies. It was mildly suggested that if they had votes they would not give them to a man who had wasted his bachelor sweetness on the desert air, when so many ladies were looking for model husbands. Mr. Burnham took credit for bringing the Children's Aid Society to this province. Here Mr. Stratton took his move. His Government had originated and passed the legislation that enabled Children's Aid Societies to be established. But, all the same, he gave Mr. Burnham all the credit he deserved; when he passed away, which it was hoped, would be a long time hence, he would have left one evidence that he was alive when on this earth. But Mr. Burnham would have one monument that would not be to his credit. He will have left a record of having done more than any man in Peterborough to sow the seeds of strife and sectarian bitterness — to arouse religious rancour; to set neighbour against neighbour; to interfere with business relations; to array two sections of the country into hostile camps. The peculiar game he was playing in this contest was well known. He was against reciprocity in hogs and horses, but he was in favour of a reciprocity of hatred and bitterness between citizen—through an issue that had nothing to do with the election. Mr. Stratton never had so many Conservatives before promise him their support. They were not willing to stand behind a man who did not represent the principles of Liberal Conservatives or Liberal Reform. Who was afraid to trust Protestantism with the Liberals and Protestants, who had done so much for Peterborough; who were behind a long series of benefits for this city? Who but Liberals and Protestants had provided in whole, or in part, the Nicholls Hospital, the Barnardo Home, the Protestant Home, the half-dozen parks of the city. He would ask Mr. Burnham if there was a single material evidence in Peterborough of anything done for Protestantism, or for the benefit of the citizens by him and those he was associated with, in the campaign he was now waging. As for himself, he had, he hoped, showed a broader conception of the duties of a good citizen. He had tried to promote religious and moral interests, irrespective of any other consideration than their benefits to the community. He had tried to be fair and just to all, irrespective of creed or nationality. He deprecated the introduction of the peace-destroying policy of his opponents, in a country where the genius of British institution guarantees equal rights and civil and religious equality under the law. We should differ as we were born to differ in some matters, but should stand shoulder to shoulder on the common ground of patriotic Canadian citizenship. If this were divided and set at creed purposes, we could never build up a strong nation. Mr. Burnham had belittled Mr. Stratton's services as representative. Would the people of Peterborough agree with him, would they say that he (Mr. Stratton) had done more than his duty in using his efforts to provide the numerous public conveniences, the Government, largely through Mr. Graham's good offices, had provided.

A FEW THINGS DONE FOR THE PEOPLE.

Was not a series of wharves from north to south of the county a benefit to the public. Were not bridges that facilitated traffic and brought farmers and their products to Peterborough a benefit to our merchants? Were not the excellent wharves in "Peterborough Presents Possibilities Unparalleled."

FRIDAY, SEPT. 1, 1911

WON'T FOLLOW SEXSMITH.

The question has very frequently been asked "How are the farmers of East Peterborough viewing the question of reciprocity"

It may be stated, without fear of contradiction, that the farmers of East Peterborough are overwhelmingly in favour if the proposed agreement. Even Conservatives, who, for purely party considerations, are going to stand by Mr. Sexsmith in the present campaign, openly express their belief that the free exchange of natural products with the United States, will result in great benefit to the farmers of Ontario, and of Canada, generally.

However, there are some Conservatives, and good ones at that, who are not going to let their party allegiance prevent their supporting a measure proposed in their interests, and the interests of the Canadian public. One of these is Mr. G. A. Brethen of Asphodel. There has never been any uncertainty as to Mr. Brethen's political affiliation—he is a Conservative. He is also a prominent and progressive farmer, who has given the question of reciprocity some considerable study. So thoroughly convinced is he, that free entry of Canadian natural products into the United States will prove of immense value to the Canadian farmers, that he has taken the platform to warn his fellow farmers, in East Peterborough, of the great mistake they will make of they fail to take advantage of the present opportunity of voting for Mr. Kerr and for larger markets.

Mr. Brethen was at Mr. Kerr's Westwood meeting and spoke as a Conservative farmer. He also spoke at Mr. Kerr's Cottesloe meeting and created a good impression by reason of the common-sense manner in which he expressed himself. He no doubt realizes that if eighteen Liberal millionaires can cast party ties aside, and come out against the pact because, perhaps, it may smash some food combines in which they are interested, it is time that the farmers of Canada, in whose behalf the relief from taxation is being granted, can cast politics aside for once, and support the measure. A chance such as this does not come every day. Mr. Brethen, although a Conservative, knows that he can vote for his party once, and even, twice, every four years, but he has a chance to vote for reciprocity only once in a life time.

GOOD POSITIONS

The Peterborough Business College is a worthy link in a chain of Seven Business Colleges, located in the cities of London, Peterborough, Welland, and the towns of Orangeville, Walkerton, Wingham, and Clinton. Owing to its high-grade work it is affiliated with the Commercial Educators' Association of Canada. It is freely admitted that owing to these connections, its students get the very best positions. Fall openings are on Aug. 28th, and Sept. 5th, but at this school each student is instructed privately at his or her own desk; students may enter any day. Many students study all at home, and others partly at home and finish at the College. As Spotton Colleges are the largest trainers in Canada, and have thirty years' experience, it would be well for young people to get their training there. Last year Mr. Spotton trained over 1,200 young people and placed them in good positions. What he has done for thousands of others he can do for you.

PRICE ADVANCED

Another advance of 10c. in the price of sugar is announced to-day. This is the second advance within two weeks. The price now stands as follows: No. 1 granulated $5.68 cwt; No. 1 yellow, $5.28 cwt.

BIGGEST, BEST AND MOST ENTHUSIASTIC CAMPAIGN MEETING EVER HELD IN WEST PETERBOROUGH

Peterborough, including the new large one to be erected in the same class. If there were nothing else to his credit, except the system of conservation dams in the north to his credit and that of the Government, he would consider he had not represented West Peterborough in vain. By these dams the flow of water was regulated and the power capacity available in Peterborough doubled. While the industries of Ottawa were hampered for lack of water, the conservation dams insured a steady supply of water to our factories and continuous employment to their operatives. City delivery of letters, rural mail delivered to the door of the farmer, over 187 miles of distance. Complaint was made that work on the Trent Canal was not being pushed ahead fast enough. The work was going ahead as fast as the contractors could get workmen to do it. The Government made employment so plentiful that labourers were scarce. The Liberal Government was treating the canal on business principles. In all their years of power the Conservatives had spent only a million and a half for canal construction. The Liberal Government, in the last fifteen years, had spent nearly 8 millions, not counting the million and three-quarters voted for expenditure last session, that is, the Liberal Government had spent 250 million dollars more in one year than their Conservative predecessors had done since Confederation. And if it had not been that Mr. Borden and his followers had blocked public business last session the

Mr. R. R. Hall, Ex-M.P., Chairman of Last Night's Wonderfully Successful Meeting

northern section of the Canal would now be under contract

Mr. Stratton suggested that if the people of Peterborough were not satisfied with what he had done for the Riding, he would try to do better the next term of parliament, an implication that was heartily applauded.

THE AGREEMENT EXPLAINED.

Mr. Stratton was careful to correct a stock misrepresentation—that reciprocity was a binding treaty. He quoted from the agreement to show that it was terminable at will by either party, and that either party was at liberty to make tariff changes that might be deemed advisable in their own interest—the agreement was simply an amendment of the tariff, and it was a gross misrepresentation to say it was permanent. Mr. Stratton wanted his hearers to understand that it did not interfere with manufacturing industries. If it had done so he would be as strongly opposed to it as he was now in favour of it. It did not mean free trade in any product of any Peterborough industry. He was a moderate protectionist, and he reserved the right, if any proposal came before parliament to the detriment of local manufacturers or any manufacturers, to vote against such proposal. The Government had done well by manufacturers, who were enabled to import raw material each year to the extent of 100 million dollars, free of duty.

Mr. Stratton read the details of tariff removal, which included only natural—farm—products. The fact that the farmers of the United States were opposed to the agreement, proved that the Canadian had the best of the bargain. There was not a household in Peterborough that would not be benefitted by the agreement. This year's Northwest grain crop would represent 300 million dollars. A good deal of this would come down to Ontario to create more business for manufacturers, more employment and more wages. When the western crop grew to 500 million bushels, both Canada and England could not consume it, and a new market was an advantage. Reduction of duty on farm products could not hurt manufacturers. Mr. Kendry had been saying in other places, what he dared not say in Peterborough—that reciprocity would close the Quaker Oats mills. Mr. Stratton had a letter from Mr. Stewart, head of the company, which confirmed what had appeared in the press—that he was not opposed to the agreement as it affected their Peterborough works, and that he would support it. Mr. Stratton defied any manufacturer to show that the agreement would injure the manufacturing industry. It would create competition in food products in the interest of cheaper living. He had lived 50 years in Peterborough, and had never advocated anything contrary to its interests. He asked mechanics and working men to contrast the condition in 1896 and at the present. They had always found him where the interests of labour were concerned, voting on the right side.

Referring to the loyalty question, Mr. Stratton said flag-waving was not loyalty. It was in the heart and expressed itself in action. Sir Wilfrid Laurier had acted his loyalty by giving freely a Preference to Great Britain, and Mr. Borden had opposed it. English statesmen did not condemn reciprocity as a breach of British connection. They called it a common-sense arrangement, a business proposal to help trade, the life blood of the British nation. He would say to the Englishmen present that the strength of Britain was the strength of her Dominions beyond the seas, and their strength was the liberty to do business, and trade as widely as possible.

In conclusion, Mr. Stratton appealed to the support of the electors of Peterborough. He would promise to deal fairly and squarely by them all and by all their interests. The close of his speech was marked by an outburst of cheering, strong and long.

THE MINISTER OF RAILWAYS SPEAKS.

George Graham rose from his chair, kissed little Eda Conner, who presented him with a bouquet, stuck his hands in his coat pockets—a favourite attitude—and walked into the audience's affections for a good hour.

"I do like to hear Mr. Graham speak," said Mr. Guthrie, "it raises me up so."

"And so it does everybody else," this from a voice at the back of the hall.

Which is pretty good proof that George Graham's blithe spirit was working quite as blithely last night as it did when he first brought it into politics years ago. The audience liked his good nature, liked his shrewd common sense, liked his homely illustrations, liked his way of paving his own case out of the other fellow's mouth, liked his facts, liked his figures, liked his stories, liked his neat newspaper editor way of hammering a point home with satire and paradox—in a word liked George Graham up and down, straight across and clean through. The audience also noticed that George Graham's voice was clear and strong and that it hadn't failed like Mr. Borden's. But of course one reason for that, is that he doesn't have to use arguments that choke him and rasp his throat like Mr. Borden does.

Mr. Graham passed out a compliment to Mr. J. R. Stratton, as the man at Ottawa who gets things done for Peterborough.

"Mr. Hall was a good asker," said Mr. Graham, "and Mr. Stratton is his lineal descendant. Whenever either of that pair came to me for anything they had a habit of sticking around till they got it."

A BOOMERANG PAMPHLET.

The Minister of Railways had a lot of fun out of the Borden campaign pamphlet entitled, "Let Well Enough Alone." He made this little book of our friend the enemy argue for him. He turned their own gun against them.

"Why," said Mr. Graham, "they say you've got so blooming rich under the Laurier Government that you'd better not do anything more. If you believe this book—and I don't see any reason why you shouldn't believe parts of it—up to Sept. 21, 1911, there was not such a prosperous country in the world as Canada. They O. K. our figures, showing the $530,000,000 trade increase since 1896, they gloat over the mounting bank deposits, and they even own up to the deficits they had before 1896 and the surpluses we had afterwards. It's positively cruel to see the moonlessing it in such big lumps."

"But we can't let well enough alone" went on Mr. Graham, "we have to provide for the future when, for example, the Northwest grain crop will outrun the ability of the British market and our own home market to absorb it. We've got to have another market for our surplus products. Imagine, if you can, a store that has three customers that wouldn't take four!"

"We can't stop growing you know. We can't stop raising farming products. We can't say "Let's quit. We're all right for to-day" any more than a farmer can say, "I won't do my fall plowing because I won't need it this fall" or any more than the housewife can say, "I won't set the sponge to-night because we won't be eating the bread to-night."

THE NORTH AND SOUTH BOGEY.

Being Minister of Railways, Mr. Graham was naturally interested in Clifford Sifton's objection that reciprocity meant north and south instead of east and west railway traffic.

"They contradict themselves right at the start by saying that United States products will flood our market. If United States products do that it means that your products don't go south. But that is a small quibble. I'll let it pass."

"As a matter of fact" went on Mr. Graham, "the effect of the agreement will be to tax our transportation facilities more than ever to carry the trade. It's no trouble to send wheat south now in bond over American roads for shipment to Liverpool. How much of it goes? The truth is that this trade goes more and more over Canadian railways because the country that gives the best east and west railway facilities get the trade, and Canada has the best. Not only that. We have the best water facilities and that means more business for the railways because the shipper feels that he is able to get an honest competing rate."

"Jim Hile's railways!" exclaimed Mr. Graham, "let them put as many noses over, as big as they like. We'll use them all carrying our products to the Hudson Bay and the Atlantic ocean. Besides what the railways get their great profit out of is not the west-east grain trade, but the east-west traffic in manufactured goods which are not affected by this agreement."

SIR JOHN'S LAST WILL CONTESTED.

Tufting to the tends-to-weaken-the-tie-that-binds-us-to-England argument, Mr. Graham followed Sir John Macdonald through his many and persistent efforts to get reciprocity with the United States when Sir Wilfrid Laurier's government has just accomplished. He read the familiar clauses from the 1868 tariff, from the national policy and from Sir John's speeches, showing how he never said die, so long as there was a chance of freer trade in natural products with the United States. He read the words Sir John Macdonald put into the Governor-General's mouth in the speech from the throne right after he was re-elected in 1891, stating his chronic "willingness to negotiate."

"That," said Mr. Graham, "was Sir John's last will and testament, and these fellows who claim to be his heirs are now contesting it."

Mr. Graham should have called up the shade of Sir John and asked him what he thought of Borden. And you Brutus! And who is this I see you with? Henri Bourassa! Woe's the day!

BUSINESS IS BUSINESS.

Mr. Graham quoted from that fatal book, Hansard, which holds so much dullness and so many deadly parallels between its covers, to prove that Borden, Foster, Reid, Northrup, Broder, almost every Conservative, in fact, who is now howling against the agreement, were right down to January, 1911, mightily concerned lest Canada should do anything that would injure her chances in the United States market. He even gave a little bit from Sexsmith, M.P. —Hansard, Jan. 14th, 1910—chiding the Laurier Government for not getting reciprocity.

"And now they are waving the old flag," said Mr. Graham, "and calling us traitors for getting what they themselves wanted not a year ago. If they are sincere now, they were hypocrites in 1910, and they can put that boot on the foot it fits."

"Loyalty! Does any manufacturer in Ontario buy coal from Nova Scotia? No. He gets it from the United States. Why? Because it's cheaper, and that's business. Shame on you! Why don't you buy it from Nova Scotia and build up interprovincial trade! You can see for yourself how absurd the argument is. If it's business for the manufacturer to buy coal from the United States, why should he object to the man who works for him buying from the United States some of the things he needs to eat?"

MR. HUGH GUTHRIE, K.C.

Mr. Hugh Guthrie, K.C., of Guelph, the last speaker, received a most enthusiastic reception and lived up to his reputation as a logical, eloquent speaker, whose convincing arguments were carried away from the meeting and will bear ample fruit on the twenty first of this month. He had been down at Keene, he said, an hour or so previous, addressing a large audience of farmers and telling them how much more they were going to get on their produce when this proposal was carried out. He had told them that on a hundred acre farm they would get probably $300 more each year, which he considered a moderate estimate. He believed that if this proposal was allowed to go into force it would increase the purchasing power of the farmer some $300 on each one hundred acre farm and at the same time would decrease the cost of living in the city of Peterborough. This, some people said, was a paradox, but it was, nevertheless, perfectly true. If the householder in the audience would count up his household expenses for the week as they would be under the proposal, or get his good wife in the gallery to ecount them for him he would find that he would be able to live for less money than he was at the present time. It was not a political question. It did not become so until the 18th or 20th of January last. When the proposal was read in the House of Parliament Conservatives and Liberals alike, clapped their hands, stamped their feet and hammered their desks in approval. They all thought it a fine thing. Mr. Northrup, Conservative member, said the agreement was too good to pass. The Toronto News congratulated the people of Canada upon the bargain and the next day went over the provinces one by one and showed the benefits that would follow. The Ottawa Journal, which now condemned the pact, said that the bargain was too good, it was the best thing that could be offered. Then a few of the fellows in Toronto who occupied the seats of the mighty and who had nothing to do but invest money, realizing that they were about to be hit, got together and pandemonium broke out in Toronto. Then Mr. Foster whispered to Mr. Borden "Now is the time. We'll oppose this agreement and take a chance," and hence the present campaign.

SOME FIGURES ABOUT BEEF.

The real question was, however, was it a good thing for Peterborough. He had told the farmers at Keene that the proposal was going to help them. He wished to tell his present audience that it was going to help them. It would decrease the cost of living and at the same time increase employment and necessarily result in better wages. Mr. Guthrie illustrated his point by discussing the beef question for some time. Quoting from Wednesday's Mail and Empire he showed that beef cattle were selling at Buffalo at $7.35 and at Toronto at $6.10, a difference of $1.25. With beef on the hoof on the free list, as it was in the pact, the farmer would get the equalized price between Toronto and Buffalo. The Toronto buyer would have to come up in his price or the Canadian cattle would go to Buffalo, but the Toronto buyer would come up. The pact proposed to reduce the duty on dressed beef by 1 3-4c. per pound, which meant that if the butcher did not come down in his price, American beef would come in, but the butcher would come down. The situation now was in the hands of the Toronto packers, with Wm. Davies and Company at the head. They fixed the price to the farmer for his beef on the hoof and to the consumer for the meat he purchased over the counter. This point was made quite clear to the audience by Mr. Guthrie by a telling illustration in which he took up the case of a 1200 pound steer. If the price was, say $6.00, the farmer would receive $72.00 for the animal. It would dress probably 60 pounds to the hundred weight, which would give 720 pounds of meat and 480 pounds of offal and he asked the audience to remember that the packer was making a profit on every part of the offal. The meat would be sold, one-third of it at an average of 20c. per pound, one third at an average of 15c. per pound and one-third at an average of 10c. per pound. That is the difference between what the farmer received and what the consumer paid over the counter, or 80 or 90 per cent. went to the packer.

Mr. Guthrie went into the figures of the pact, showing the reductions on flour, breakfast foods, biscuits, canned vegetables, canned fruits and other articles. He showed unmistakably that the consumer would live for less money, the farmer would receive more money and that the whole country would prosper to a greater degree than ever before.

THE FLAG-WAVING CAMPAIGN.

Had the audience ever heard the Opposition talk prices in discussing the pact? They answered the whole question by a display of flags, by a flag-waving campaign. Mr. Borden, who had been years in the House, called a statesman forsooth, had stood on that platform and had told the people of Peterborough what Senator Beveridge had said, what President Taft had said, that Canada had come to the parting of the ways. The speaker remarked that a man who said that because President Taft said so-and-so, the people of Canada were bound to obey, was a coward. It was not what President Taft said; it was what the people of Canada said. There were some eight millions of them and there was not an annexationist among them. Grit or Tory, let President Taft or Champ Clark say what they thought fit. The self-termed loyalty crowd were cowardly in saying that the proposed pact meant annexation. They were not the class of men to make Canada great, and their attitude was a cringing and cowardly one, for which every British subject should despise them.

Mr. Borden had said during his western tour this summer that he would maintain the British preference, when he had twice voted against it. If the audience would look over the political life of Canada they would see which was the real British party in Canadian politics. Sir Charles Tupper had said "Not a man, not a dollar" when the question of Canadian assistance at the time of the North African trouble came up, but Sir Wilfrid was in power when the South African war broke out and Canadian contingents were sent to the assistance of the Mother country. In 1891 Sir Louis Davis had introduced into the House of Commons the British preference and every Liberal had voted for it, while every Conservative had voted it down. When the Liberal Government came into power in 1896 the first bill they introduced was the British preference and once more it was supported by every Liberal, while every Conservative opposed it. Yet again in 1902 when Mr. Benj. Russell moved that the British preference be increased, every Conservative voted against the proposal.

NO TAX ON BRITISH FOOD.

Mr. Guthrie stated that during his visit to England as one of Canada's parliamentary representatives to the Coronation, he had discussed the question of preferential tariff with Mr. Balfour, Lord Cecil and other leaders and Lord Cecil had said that Great Britain would never place a tax on the food stuffs of the British workmen. Preferential tariff was as far off now as it ever was. Why should not Canada take this offer and give it a fair trial. The Conservatives argued that if Canada was to wait for two years, the Democrat party in the United States would be in power and they would give Canada a better agreement. The Democrat party was not in power—"They never will be" came from the audience—and why not give the pact a trial. He believed in protection for the manufacturer and in saving the Northwest for Canada, but he advised his hearers not to take away from the farmer a chance to make everything he could out of his products.

Mr. Guthrie concluded a splendid effort by an eloquent tribute to Sir Wilfrid Laurier, whom he characterized as "probably one of the greatest Britons, who had proved his loyalty by more than word of mouth."

Enthusiastic cheers for the King, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, Messrs. Graham and Guthrie and the candidate brought the meeting to a fitting close.

Sifton In West

Special to The Examiner:

BRANDON, MAN., SEPT. 1.—It is announced that Clifford Sifton will conduct an eleventh hour campaign for three days previous to election day in Hartney, Souris and Brandon, the latter being his own old constituency. The reciprocity Liberals here are very antagonistic and there may be an ugly demonstration.

How To Stop Drinking

We are in earnest when we ask you to try ORRINE at our expense. We will give your money back, if after a trial you fail to get results from ORRINE. This is a very generous offer. It gives the wives and mothers of those who drink to excess an opportunity to try the ORRINE Treatment. It also shows our confidence in the merits of ORRINE. ORRINE is recognized as the best and most successful remedy the world has ever known for Drunkenness or the so-called Liquor Habit. It is a very simple treatment, can be given in the home without publicity or loss of time from business, and at a small price.

ORRINE is prepared in two forms. No. 1, secret treatment, a powder, absolutely tasteless, and odourless, given secretly in food or drink ORRINE No. 2, in pill form, is for those who desire to take voluntary treatment. ORRINE costs only $1.00 a box. Write for Free ORRINE Booklet (mailed in plain sealed envelope) to ORRINE CO., Orrine Building, Washington, D. C. ORRINE is recommended and is for sale in this city by Wm. Madill, druggist.

Harvesting By Moonlight

WINNIPEG, SEPT. 1.—Weather conditions are warm and showery, all over the West to-day. The fields, in many sections, are too wet. The harvesting will be resumed by evening. The machines are running by moonlight as late as midnight, in many sections.

THE LAST CHANCE

The Government has thrown open for entry 25,000 homesteads in Western Canada in the Provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan. These homesteads are within 30 miles of present lines of the Canadian Northern Railway (and some much less) and all will undoubtedly be served by railway lines within a short time.

The low round trip homeseekers' fares to points in Alberta and Saskatchewan are in effect only two more days this year. September 5th and 19th. The fares are low, the return limits long and the stop-over privileges liberal.

Write at once for the latest Homeseekers' guide, fares and other particulars. The Canadian Northern Railway offers a choice of all routes, reaches nearly every part of Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba, thus enabling one to examine all sections and make a wise selection.

All particulars can be obtained by writing to R. L. Fairbairn, Asst. General Passenger Agent, Canadian Northern Railway, Toronto, Ont.

ALFALFA

From Farm and Dairy.

Recently we passed a nice field of alfalfa nearly ready for a second cutting. The stand was good and the foliage very green. We were very much surprised to learn that the field had never been artificially inoculated. We had passed the field many times last summer and had thought then that it was a failure.

The owner cut it twice last year but received from both cuttings less than what one cutting will now make. In the fall there were big bare spots in the field and some farmers would have turned the crop under and would have had nothing to do with alfalfa again. The owner, however, did not do this. He probably had read what Mr. Wing, the alfalfa expert of Ohio, said of his experience. So in the fall he applied manure to the bare spots and this year he has been repaid.

Mr. Wing says: "From experience I feel sure that I had rather take a poor piece of land, well manured, for alfalfa growing, than a naturally rich piece of land with no manure." In another part of his book he says:

"I once saw a field sown in alfalfa in Canada that was so well inoculated that in six weeks after the alfalfa was sown, the tiny nodules were found on the roots and this field was the first sown in that neighborhood, nor was it artificially inoculated. It had simply been well manured. In other states I have seen the same curious results. In Iowa, on the experiment station farm at Ames, a field was sown in alfalfa. All the seed was sown the same day and in no way was the treatment of one part of the field different from the treatment of any other part, yet there was secured a fine stand of thrifty alfalfa on one side of the field and very thin and poor alfalfa on the other side. The explanation seemed to be that on a previous year one side of this field had been manured and sugar beets grown thereon. Yet all the field seemed very fertile, and Director C. F. Curtiss thought that planted in corn all of the field was rich enough to grow 80 bushels to the acre. But that addition of some stable manure a year or two previously made one side of the field eminently fit for alfalfa, while the other side remained in unprofitable condition so far as alfalfa was concerned."
—Indiana Farmer.

OUR IMPORTS

From Farm and Dairy.

Our imports (purchases) last year (1910) from the entire world amounted to $301,825,682; and out of that we purchased no less than $239,670,549 (almost two-thirds of it) from the United States. Thus, it appears that, notwithstanding the high tariff walls and other embargoes erected to prevent it, we climbed up over those walls, paid those high duties, and actually purchased $239,000,000 out of $301,000,000 worth of the goods we required to purchase from countries outside of Canada. That manifests in the most positive and only conclusive manner where we purchase our foreign requirements in spite of all obstructions and where our best purchasing market is. People don't purchase where it does not pay to do so.

Now let us see where we sell our surplus products. The same year (1910) our exports to the entire world amounted to $301,358,529, and out of that sum we exported (sold) no less than $113,150,778 (nearly one-third) to the United States, also in face of the high tariff walls and other obstructions against it. That indicates beyond all cavil, where we sell our surplus products. Again, I say that people don't sell in one market if they can do better in another.

The foregoing from J. P. Secord, of Orillia, Ont., points out clearly that trade in the past has not followed the flag and economic conditions alone determined where we buy and sell.

CASCARETS WORK WHILE YOU SLEEP

Salts, Calomel and Cathartic Pills Are Violent—They Act on Bowels as Pepper Acts in Nostrils

Take a Cascaret to-night and thoroughly cleanse your Liver, Stomach and Bowels, and you will surely feel great by morning. You men and women who have headache, coated tongue, can't sleep, are bilious with a sick, grassy, disordered stomach, or have headache and feel all worn out.

Are you keeping clean inside with Cascarets—or merely forcing a passageway every few days with salts, cathartic pills or castor oil? This is important.

Cascarets immediately cleanse and regulate the stomach, remove the sour, undigested and fermenting food and foul gases; take the excess bile from the liver and carry off the decomposed waste matter and poison from the intestines and bowels.

Remember, a Cascaret to-night will straighten you out by morning. A 10-cent box from your druggist means a clear head and cheerfulness for months. Don't forget the children.

SORES AND THEIR CAUSE

From Farm and Dairy.

When sores occur, seek the cause, correct it, then aid nature in effecting recovery. Having removed the cause wash well after each day's work and dust with any good antiseptic powder, or easier, dampen with a tablespoonful of tannic acid in a quart of soft water for this purpose. It will keep for a week, costs but little and is easily applied. Dusting powder made up of boric and tannic acid are equally effective, or zinc oxide may be used. Dry sulphur and air slaked lime is a favorite mixture with some and is quite good.

Sore neck in horses is due usually to one of two causes: a short collar or too great weight coupled with the side motion as noted in a two-wheeled vehicle. A horse can carry quite a heavy weight on the neck provided there is no jerking sidewise. Treatment is the same as for sore shoulders; remove the cause, then wash well and treat with an antiseptic and astringent wash or powder.

A GOOD COW

From Farm and Dairy.

A real good cow has large, prominent milk veins and a rich, velvety skin.

When the dairy farmers of a community begin buying pure bred bulls it augurs well for the dairy business in that section.

It's a mighty easy thing for one man to advise another to be kind to his cows so that they will give lots of milk. It is sometimes quite another thing to follow out such advice. He knows best who has tried to milk a kicking heifer on a hot evening in fly time. Of course there is nothing to prevent being kind to this heifer—nothing except human nature, and human nature always seems to find expression most easily under such circumstances. Have you been there?

Of course, this is a busy time of the year. The call of the grain field is stronger with the majority of farmers than the call of the cow. Of course the harvesting and the stacking and the threshing must not be neglected, but neither should the cow be neglected. A few minutes each day spent in cutting some green fodder and throwing it over the pasture fence for the cows, or better still, feeding it in the stable, is time well spent. It will result in larger cream checks right now and more economical feeding next fall and winter.

SURROUNDINGS IDEAL

From Farm and Dairy.

What a poor, misused young woman! She looks with longing eyes toward the city, where fine dresses and dainty complexions seem to make life for young womanhood one grand sweet song of bliss and contentment. There the girls of her age have only to revel in the luxuries showered upon them by indulgent parents while she has to struggle along washing dishes, feeding chickens and even milking cows!

Poor girl. Little does she realize that she is, after all, living the life that comes the nearest to being a perfect life possible. Little does she realize the heartaches and sorrows indulged in by scores of other city girls where one enjoys the pleasures such as she pictures. While this one is indulging in the pleasures, such as they are, of city life, hundreds of other girls of her own age are working long hours in hot, stuffy factories and offices, longing for the very air and freedom which the girl on the farm does not appreciate.

If life on the farm was ever intended by Nature to be unsuitable to the happiness and health of mankind, it certainly was intended as particularly suitable for the gentler sex. Generally speaking the physical strength and endurance of men, the surroundings of a well kept country home, are ideal for the highest development of those virtues which makes the good woman such a power in the home and nation.

BEST HOUSES FOR FOWL

From Farm and Dairy.

The two single slant roof houses we use are built similar to each other, excepting that one has a muslin cloth front, and the other, movable windows. Our other two houses, although both have a double pitch roof are not of the same design, nor is the lumber the same in each. One house, which we call the cold house, is constructed of hemlock one inch boards with the cracks battened. It is single ply. The front or south side is lighted by three windows reaching from the eaves to 18 inches above the floor. On either side of centre window are two large wooden doors reaching from eave to ground. These are opened daily in winter, excepting on stormy days or when there is no sun shining. This house is the cheapest built of the four. It also gives the best all round results, i. e., general health, egg laying and fertility.

WARM HOUSE NOT SATISFACTORY

The other house is termed a warm one, it is built of dressed pine, tongued and grooved, two ply with dead air space between. Building paper is also used inside. The south side contains four windows, each the same dimensions as those used in the cold house. These are tight. The results obtained from this house are the poorest of the four. The air, in winter, is bad, and the atmosphere is always damp and stuffy, so much so that it is noticed that the same number of birds drink three to four pints less water daily than those in the other three houses. The windows of this house have had to be removed in spring and summer, or it would have become well-nigh uninhabitable.

These last two houses have straw lofts. These have been a great success. Boards are placed lengthwise about four inches apart, and about a foot of straw placed thereon. This is put through a small opening at each end of the building. No frost has been noticed on the walls of the house where this plan has been followed. The vents mentioned are left open during the summer months and are instrumental in keeping the houses much cooler than houses having a single roof.

DRY COLD NOT INJURIOUS

The difference in temperature of the warm and cold houses is about 10 degrees, and yet there has been as big a percentage of frosted combs in the former as in the latter. The question of comb freezing is not a matter of low temperature but rather of low vitality.

As regards roofing, the two single slant houses were covered with burlap, tarred and nailed to rough boarding. These have had to be renewed recently. The other two were shingled. They look good enough for a long while yet.

One of the other houses has been covered with a patent rubber roofing. This was only done recently, so cannot state as to its durability.

All of these houses are permanently fixed, and have grass runs attached. One interesting thing brought out is that Wyandottes need a much larger area of grass run than Orpingtons, even when the egg yields are equal.

"MIDGET" GETS FIRST TORONTO EXHIBITION

At the Canadian National Exhibition, which is being held in Toronto this week, Hon. J. R. Stratton's runabout horse "Midget" won first prize in a large class. This is the only class that Mr. Stratton had exhibited in up to Thursday evening.

"Midget," which took first prize at the New York Madison Square Gardens, is a wonderful mare. She is very fast, seems to know when she is in the show ring, gets away very quickly, and attracts the attention of the onlooker when she is going, as seldom a horse does. "Midget" takes her place in the show ring as will few horses in America. No doubt she will take her turn at being beaten, as all good horses are beaten sometime, but up to the present she has never been beaten.

Peterborough certainly made a great showing in this class at the Exhibition, as in addition to Mr. Stratton's "Midget" taking first, Mr. H P. Rennely's entry captured second place, giving Peterborough both first and second places in this competition.

AN EFFECTIVE SHOW WINDOW

Everyone who buys footwear and who doesn't? will be interested in the magnificent display of ladies and gentlemen's boots and shoes, which is now on exhibition in the show window of Mr. C. E. Smith, George street, successor to Mr. R. McWhinnie.

The display is tastefully arranged in two sections, ladies on one side and gentlemen's on the other, while the effect is further augmented by a skillful arrangement of mirrors. Mr. Smith handles the well-known Empress model for ladies and also a great many other well-known makes.

Death Of Mrs. James O'Brien

In the death at her late residence, 14 Aylmer street, at 2 o'clock this (Friday) afternoon, of Mrs. James O'Brien, Peterborough lost a most highly respected and well-known citizen. The deceased, who was sixty-eight years of age, was born in the County of Limerick, Ireland, but had lived the greater part of her life in Peterborough where her amiable qualities and kindly disposition had endeared her to a very large circle of friends and acquaintances. She was married some thirty-eight years ago to Mr. James O'Brien, who survives her. The only surviving son is Rev. Dr. O'Brier, rector of the Church of the Sacred Heart, who will have the sympathy of the community in his bereavement.

The late Mrs. O'Brien had been ailing for the past couple of years and had been seriously ill for the last month or two.

The funeral will take place on Monday morning at 9 o'clock from 14 Aylmer street, to the Sacred Heart church and thence to St Peter's cemetery for interment.

CHARGE WITHDRAWN

A local man who appeared in the police court two weeks ago on a charge of receiving stolen goods, and who was remanded at that time because of the absence of one of the main witnesses in the case, was given a hearing again this morning, with the result that the charge was withdrawn. The goods supposed to have been stolen was about $30 worth of copper wire, which was the property of the C.G.E. Co. The wanting witness who had gone on a visit to Hamilton, returned a few days ago and supplied the lacking evidence, with the above result. Several little boys connected with the case, gave evidence.

TERRIBLE FATALITY AT C. G. E. THIS MORNING

Frank LaFave Was Crushed Between a Freight Car and Building---Expired Almost Immediately --- Leaves a Large Family.

Mr. Frank LaFave met a horrible death this morning at the C. G. E. by being crushed between the storehouse building and a freight car.

Deceased, who was an employee of the company, was standing near the freight entrance of the storehouse building when the accident happened.

A broken door on a C. P. R. freight car was indirectly responsible for the man's death. The car had been left on the siding yesterday, and this morning was being shunted around to a more favourable position by the G. T. R. shunting engine. A moveable table, which is used to load the freight upon, was standing in front of the doorway in which deceased was standing. When the car was being shunted along the broken door of the car caught the edge of the table and threw it against the jamb of the store house door. LaFave was caught between the jamb and the oncoming door and badly crushed. He died almost instantly, in the arms of his fellow employees, who rushed to his assistance.

Dr. Eastwood was summoned, but his services were not required. The remains were removed to Comstock's undertaking establishment.

He is survived by a wife and eight children; they are, namely, John of Rochester, Alfred, Frank, and Harry of Peterborough; the daughters are Mrs. Lawrence and Mrs. LeGros of Peterborough, Mrs. Head and Mrs. Smith of Toronto.

When Mr. Dobie, the Assistant Superintendent of the Works, was seen by the Examiner this morning, relative to the accident, he refused to discuss the matter.

An Explanation

The Examiner has received a communication from Mr. B. Bedworth, Vice-President of the Epworth League of St. James' Church, regarding its criticism of the action of the President of the League in using the Church for the purpose of advancing the interests of the Conservative candidate.

Mr. Bedworth says that "no party politics has, ever, to his knowledge, been mentioned in connection with the League."

All we can say in connection with this matter is, that those present who gave the Examiner the information, and of whom the Examiner has inquired since, say that no other construction could be placed on the use of the meeting and the address given. If Mr. Goodwin was innocently led into the matter and the extracts that were read from President Taft's speeches were not with a view to influencing the minds of those present and giving them a party. then they should not have been read, as they were entirely foreign to any address on patriotism or citizenship.

If, as stated to the Examiner, Mr. Goodwin is not a member of Mr. Burnham's committee, it is entirely to his credit, and for the offence of saying so, ample apology is made.

If the Examiner's criticism was stronger than the occasion demanded, it was directed more to a denunciation of the principle of using the Church for political purposes than to personal condemnation of those that took part in it.

Wherever Mr. Burnham can get a minister who is weak enough—not to say wicked enough—to promote his candidature by appeals to passion and prejudice, he is only too ready and willing to avail himself of their willingness to prostitute the church to his purposes by announcing partisan political addresses fro mthe pupit.

As Hon. George P. Graham put it at Brockville; "Did you ever hear of the removal of taxation on food increasing the cost of living?"

Moulders Want Nine Hour Day

Special Wire to The Examiner.

TORONTO, SEPT. 1—The Moulders' Conference Board discussed this morning the proposition of nine hour work day for Ontario. It was decided unanimously that in May 1912 at the expiration of the present agreements, an attempt would be made to establish nine hours in Ontario and get better sanitary conditions in Ontario shops. The officers were elected as follows: President, H. Gray, St. Catharines; Vice-Pres., D. Melvin, Galt; Sec.-Treas., F. C. Burgess, Woodstock.

A PRESENTATION

St. Luke's W. A. made a presentation to Mrs. J. Philips, life member of the W. A., who left Peterborough Tuesday, to take up her residence in Toronto. The W. A. met at the residence of Mrs. W. H. Gibbs, 787 George street. The gift, which was a handsome leather rocker, was made by Mrs. Gaskins, President of the W. A., and an appreciative address was read to Mrs. Philips by Mrs. J. W. Hickey, Treasurer. Mrs. Philips made a suitable reply, in which she expressed her regrets at leaving from the midst of her fellow members, but stated that she would treasure the present as a token of remembrance of the many happy days she spent among them.

We do not blame you if you doubt 30-Day Shorthand. What does hurt is to have you condemn us without first hearing our evidence. Moon College invites keenest scrutiny. 262-266 Yonge street, Toronto.

Miss Sutton Was Beaten

NIAGARA, ONT., SEPT. 6.—Miss Florence Sutton, who won the Canadian tennis championship in Toronto, two weeks ago, was beaten by Miss Hotchkiss here to-day, 5-7, 6-2, 6-4.

No Thought Of Annexation In Minds Of People Of The United States

Mr. George H. Marsland, of New York, was an interested listener to the speeches last night at the Opera House, and an Examiner representative called on him this morning, at his hotel, to gain his ideas on the question being agitated of reciprocity. Mr. Marsland, who, by the way, is an Englishman, and representing an English Publication House, but who has travelled in the United States for fifteen years, states that from his intimate knowledge and touch as a commercial journalist with the American people that no such thought exists as to "annexation (the bugaboo of the "outs,") and that the States have enough in their minds to attend to their own affairs. As they state of our English-speaking "cousins" desire to come in with us, they are welcome, but no invitations from our side. They simply don't need Canada, but thoroughly appreciate them as neighbours. Champ. Clark, leader of the pro tem party in Congress, made an extempore remark about "annexation," for his political purposes, just as any party man in power would do, and for temporary effect, but the reading in the papers of his remark next morning simply called for a laugh or an assistant to digestion.

Undoubtedly you will have to fight the monetary or trust interests on this question of reciprocity. American Trust money and, I regret to add, English corporate interests, are strongly in the field to defeat the workingman's welfare, but it is dollars to doughnuts Sir Wilfrid Laurier logic, and wider markets will succeed over wishwash rhetoric and the greed for office. Personally, I admire just two things in this life—brains and consistency. The statesman is embodied in Sir Wilfrid Laurier and against him is a party who for over forty-five years, to my personal knowledge, has been advocating free trade for natural products with the United States. At my time of life, I regret to say, the old adage is true in politics—the "outs" against the "ins" and politics is stopping business all over the world.

Skyscrapers Out Of Plumb

Special to The Examiner:

CHICAGO, N.Y., SEPT. 1.— Great alarm was aroused in skyscraper district by the discovery that the sixteen storey Unity building is three feet out of plumb. The owners have been ordered to pull it down or straighten it up. It has also been discovered that the twenty-one storey Masonic building is also seriously out of plumb and other big structures are giving anxiety. Swampy soil and construction of underground railways is given as the cause.

Big Marriage Settlement

Examiner Special:

NEW YORK, N.Y., SEPT. 1.— In the marriage settlement signed Monday John Jacob Astor, aged 45, gives five million dollars to Miss Madeline Force, whom he marries shortly at Newport and makes a will leaving her millions more at his death. Madeline is the pretty 18 year old daughter of a small Gotham merchant.

Murder In Second Degree

Special to The Examiner.

NEW YORK, N.Y., SEPT. 1.—Murder in the second degree was the verdict of the jury at 10 o'clock this morning against Paul Geidell, aged seventeen, the bellboy who killed William H. Jackson in the Iroquois hotel on July twenty-sixth in order to rob him. Geidell thus escapes the electric chair, but will be sentenced to a term in prison.

The jury had been locked up since three o'clock yesterday afternoon.

Feeling In Germany

Special to The Examiner:

BERLIN, SEPT. 1. — There still seems a determined attempt on the part of a section of the German press to rouse feeling against England in connection with the Morroccan situation. Vossische Zeitung calls attention to the fact that General Sir John French and other English officers, high in authority, are at present making a tour of the French fortresses and German frontier. The opinion in London is that an amicable settlement will be made between France and Germany.

VEHICLE COLLAPSED

Mr. J. Fowler, a North Monaghan farmer, had the misfortune of smashing his vehicle, which was loaded with grain, on Charlotte street, last evening. The vehicle was too heavily loaded, and the rear wheel collapsed when crossing the street car track. Mr. Fowler had a misfortune of a similar nature on Saturday last, but it was of more serious proportions, as Mr. Fowler was somewhat badly injured on the leg and thigh. He was just recovering from his mishap when this one occurred, but fortunately his horse was a quiet one and he escaped without injury.

A DEPUTATION

Peterborough is to be honoured this month by a visit of a deputation from the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church, who will inspect the Presbyterian churches of the city, and some in the surrounding country, probably those at Springville, Omemee and Pontypool. The deputation will include the Moderator, R. P. MacKay, Dr. A. S. Grant, Superintendent of Home Missions, and Rev. F. W. Anderson, secretary of the Laymen's Missionary Movement, and will be here on Sunday, Sept. 24th. It is quite likely that a banquet will be held on the Monday night following.

WHOOPING COUGH

Mrs. Charles Lovell, Agassiz, B.C., writes: "Seven of our nine children had whooping cough the same winter and we attribute their cure to Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine. We always have it in the house, and recommend it as the king of all medicines. I was formerly completely cured of protruding piles by using Dr. Chase's Ointment."

The Reciprocity agreement saves the people from those who would monopolize their food supply.

RUNAWAY

There was a rather exciting scene on Charlotte street last evening about 4 o'clock, when one of Mr. Florence's horses, attached to a junk waggon, ran from a car on the G.T.R. tracks on Bethune street, around to Dr. Robinson's livery barn. The horse tried to run into the barn, but slipped and fell on the pavement, where it was caught. No damage resulted.

Liverpool and Chicago Wheat Futures Close Higher—Live Stock—Latest Quotations.

CHICAGO, Aug. 31.—Unexpected strength in foreign markets, the result mainly of war risks having been advanced, brought about to-day higher prices for wheat. The close was with a gain of 3-4 to 7-8 over last night. Other leading staples rose, too—corn 1-16 to 7-8c, oats 1-16c to 1c and provisions $ 2-3c to 12 1-2c.

The Liverpool market closed to-day 1/2d higher than yesterday on wheat, and 1/4d lower on corn. Buda Pest wheat closed 1c lower.

MONTREAL, Aug. 31.—There continues to be a good enquiry from foreign buyers for new crop spring wheat for October-November shipment, and prices bid were 2c per bushel higher, but even at this advance exporters stated it was impossible to do any business which would show a profit. BUYING A WIFE.

Worthelmer's Clever Coup by Which He Secured the Prize.

The late Charles Worthelmer whom indeed it was considered what he considered to be his astutest business coup thought for awhile and then told how once when he was walking through a Brighton square he spied through an open window what he knew to be a priceless Chinese vase. He went to the nearest postoffice, examined a local directory and found the name of the resident. Then he called and asked for the gentleman and was shown into the study under the name of "Hamilton." He briefly explained that he was looking for a present home in Brighton and had taken a fancy to this one. Would the gentleman entertain an offer for the place as it stood—"lock, stock and barrel?"

The owner, a little nonplussed, hesitated.

"If your offer is reasonable," interrupted Hamilton, "I will give you an extra thousand."

"Call tomorrow at 10:30, then," replied the owner.

Hamilton did and found him prepared to accept £18,000 for the twenty-two years' unexpired term and the contents of the residence.

Although this was well over market value, Hamilton at once closed, adding the extra thousand, according to promise. He, however, he afterward sold the vase for £25,000, his coup was unmistakable.—London Telegraph.

WHISTLER THE FIGHTER.

The Artist Always Took His Revenges in a Refined Way.

In "Whistler as I Knew Him" Mortimer Menpes, the author, has a good deal to say about Whistler the fighter and his quickness in resenting an affront. He is careful to add that Whistler was always refined in his methods.

While he was aware he was not actually brutal. He never treated his enemies in a coarse way. Any man who had offended him Whistler would rap sharply over the shoulders with his cane, and then by the time the sufferer had recovered the master would be in the next room explaining to every one how he had just felled his enemy.

Once he caught a man with whom he was for the moment enraged wagging his face. Without a moment's hesitation Whistler dashed the unfortunate head straight into the basin of water, and while the foe was endeavoring to clear the soap from his eyes to see the cause of this sudden immersion Whistler was in the smoking room setting the men there in a roar with the account of his adventures.

When I first met Whistler he was in the act of searching for a man who had dared to criticise his Venetian etchings. "If you want to see some fun, Menpes," he said, twinkling with [illegible]

Furthermore the man was not only warned and was nowhere to be found.

Slavery in Old Greece.

The Greeks were slave owners with a vengeance. All manual work was done by "barbarians," as the Greeks called those who had been captured in war. The greatest of the Greeks saw no evil in the institution. Aristotle is quite outspoken in his justification of slavery. A certain amount of mean work had to be done, he claimed, and "mean natured men" were intending to do it. The slaves in some of the Greek states outnumbered the freemen four or five to one. Manual labor came in Greece to be thought a degradation, suited only for beings who could not do the higher work. Even freemen who worked for wages were by Aristotle placed outside the constitution. And what was true of the Greeks was equally true of most of the other ancient nations.—Exchange.

Shakespeare as an Actor.

About the year 1590 one of the London companies received an addition in the person of a young man who was not only a skillful and useful actor, but who also possessed the accomplishment of being able to adapt older plays to the taste of the times and even proved to have the gift of writing tolerably good plays himself, though older and jealous colleagues might hint at their not being altogether original. This young man, whose capacities became of no slight use to the company and the theater, was named William Shakespeare.—From "A History of Theatrical Art."

Very Complicated.

Aunt Kate—What brings that young Mr. Stevens to the house so often? Mildred—Well, his mother's stepfather married a second cousin of my father's great-aunt. We're trying to figure out what relation that makes him to us, and it can't be done in one evening.—St. Louis Times.

Keeping Tab on Dad.

"What does your father do when you ask him any questions?" asked one small boy.

"He generally says, 'I'm busy just now; don't bother me,'" replied the other. "Then when I go out of the room he looks in the encyclopedia."—Washington Star.

Breaking the Record.

The Caller—I hear that you've been to a party, Mabel. Did you dance much? Mabel (aged eight)—I should say I did. I danced two quadrilliums.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Labor—the expenditure of vital energy in some form—is the medicine, nay, it is the master, of ruins.—Ruskin.

PROGRESS OF WIRELESS.

The System is Rapidly Spreading All Over the World.

By the law of the land no vessel carrying fifty or more persons, including passengers and crew, may leave any port in the United States on a voyage of more than 200 miles after July 1 unless it is equipped with wireless telegraph apparatus capable of transmitting and receiving messages over a distance of at least 100 miles, day or night, in charge of a competent operator.

Even without the strong encouragement of the law, without any influence whatever beyond the cold logic of achievement, the world's installation of wireless telegraph apparatus had grown to a grand total of 1,820 stations on ship and shore, exclusive of foreign warships and amateur outfits, up to Oct. 1, 1910, according to a directory compiled by the United States navy department. Of this total 821 were on steamships, yachts and tugs throughout the world. Of the shore stations the United States had 208, of which eighty-eight were on the Atlantic and gulf coasts, forty-eight were on the great lakes, fifty-one on the Pacific coast, sixteen in Alaska and three in the interior. The United States navy had 344 ship and forty-seven shore stations, the army thirty shore and sixteen ship stations.

In 1909 the Marconi company transmitted between ship and shore messages aggregating 519,000 words. The transatlantic business ranges from 60,000 to 75,000 words a week. The British postoffice department reported that in the three months ending Oct. 1, 1910, twice as many wireless messages were sent and received as in any other corresponding period. As the first step toward establishing a ring of wireless stations completely encircling the United Kingdom the government has purchased the stations already in operation. The New Zealand government recently asked for bids for erecting five wireless stations, while fifteen new wireless stations now being constructed along the Amazon and Paraguay rivers in Brazil will be in operation before the end of the year.—Technical World Magazine.

MEN'S HATS MIGHTY DEAR.

That Is, For Those in the Fashionable Swim in New York.

New York men's hats cost more than New York women's hats, not in the first outlay, but in the maintenance. A woman pays from $5 to $30 for her elaborate hat, on the average, anchors it to her head, and there it stays, except when it is reposing in its home receptacle. But not so with a man. On certain occasions etiquette requires that he uncover his head, and that is when the expense of maintenance begins its insidious work.

A bachelor of Gramercy park who takes his meals at restaurants has kept tab on his hat expense and made a report. He is an economical man in his dress, clothing himself well, but taking scrupulous care of his attire. He pays $5 for his derby hat and keeps it in good condition for six months. When he goes to a restaurant he always finds attendants ready to assist him in taking care of it. His bookkeeping shows that the hat he discarded on April 1 had cost him $35.80 in tips, which, added to the original cost, makes $40.80.

"Rather expensive hat, and I think that the Indians have a great advantage over us," was the bachelor's comment.—New York Herald.

Ireland is Doing Pretty Well.

Ireland isn't so badly off as some reports that reach this country would indicate. A correspondent of the Chicago News writes that "figures have been compiled showing that the country possesses more than 24,000,000 hens and 250,000 goats. It is exporting nearly $20,000,000 worth of poultry produce, while England imports $35,000,000 worth of eggs." He adds that "Ireland, according to these figures, is becoming a second Denmark. The increase in poultry is due principally to the establishment of co-operative depots, which have steadily multiplied. The recently started society called the United Irish Women is rapidly becoming a force in the development of agriculture, and it is believed that the efforts of the organization will result in a greatly reduced emigration."

Has Your Dog a Visiting Card?

Visiting cards for dogs are among the latest freak novelties. They are used by women who take their dog pets with them when they visit houses where there are also pet animals. In a home where a little King Charles has all the attention and affection usually bestowed upon a child a card basket contains the engraved evidence of visits from Schnappe, Fid, Jumbo, Tip, Lassie, Bijou, Aime and many other canine friends of little King. Many of these cards were added to the collection on one day when King had a reception. One card marked "Regrets" came from Sultan, a Maltese cat.

Oil Lamps Poison Calcutta.

A great nuisance arises at night in Calcutta from the open flames of oil lamps. It is estimated that 20,000 to 30,000 of these are used in various shops and small factories in the town and suburbs. The health committee of Calcutta is considering an amendment to the Bengal smoke nuisance act to prohibit the use of such lamps, as their smoke is a source of throat and lung complaints.

NORTHERN ONTARIO.

Some Pertinent Facts About the New Promised Land.

Area, 140,000 square miles.

Southern boundary is practically the Canadian Pacific Railway direct line from Montreal to Winnipeg, which runs across Ontario for a distance of 1,295 miles.

Northern boundary, the Arctic regions.

Eastern boundary, the Province of Quebec.

Western boundary, the Province of Manitoba and the Territory of Keewatin.

The country is divided into six great divisions, known as Nipissing, Sudbury, Algoma, Thunder Bay, Rainy River and Kenora.

Minerals are found extensively, and in splendid paying quantities, especially gold, silver, nickel, copper and iron.

The most important mining centres are Sudbury, Michipicoten, Temiskaming, Cobalt, Porcupine and Gowganda. The mineral output now exceeds $67,000,000 annually, and is increasing.

Game is plentiful, including moose, caribou, red deer, bear, beaver, otter, wild duck, partridge and ruffed grouse.

There are immense quantities of waterpower scattered over nearly all of Northern Ontario, and very little of it has been developed as yet.

There are now a number of villages and towns scattered over the country whose population runs from fifty up to several thousands.

Telegraph and telephone connections are spreading with amazing rapidity all over the land.

The parks and forest reserves are large—Algonquin Park covers an area of 1,216,000 acres; Temagami Forest Reserve covers 4,670,000 acres; the Missisauga Reserve covers 1,000,000 acres, with several smaller reserves.

A Busy Woman.

Mrs. Adam Shortt, of Ottawa, the well-known worker in women's circles, was formerly Miss Elizabeth Smith, of Hamilton, and had won distinction as a Canadian woman before she married Dr. Adam Shortt, who was for many years Professor of Political Economy at Queen's University, Kingston, and is now commissioner of the Civil Service at Ottawa. Mrs. Shortt it was who first wrote to Queen's University to ask for separate classes for women and was the first regularly matriculated woman student to enter the University. In 1884 she graduated in medicine, one of the first three women to do so, and besides her degree from Queen's she holds a diploma from the Ontario College of Physicians and Surgeons, so that she was able to practice medicine, which she did for two years in Hamilton. Since her marriage Mrs. Shortt has taken a very deep interest in all forms of philanthropy, especially that pertaining to the public health. She is at present convener of the Public Health Committee of the National Council of Women, and is on a similar committee, of which Lady Aberdeen is convener, in the International Council. She is also keenly interested in the Anti-Tuberculosis Crusade. She is an active member of the Y.W.C.A., having held the office of president in the Kingston branch for several years, during her residence in that city. In Ottawa, Mrs. Shortt holds the office of vice-president of the Women's Canadian Club, vice-president of the Council of Women, and belongs as well to the Women's Historical Society and to the Mothers' Union, which gives much assistance to the Day Nursery recently opened in connection with the Settlement House.—Canadian Courier.

The Great Clay Belt.

Northwest of this section of Temiskaming, and beyond the Height of Land (a scarcely perceptible ridge, forty miles from New Liskeard), is what is called the "Clay Belt," a tract of sixteen million acres of rich agricultural land, extending about 400 miles from east to west, and lying mainly south of the 50th parallel. The Ontario Government, having satisfied itself by running base and meridian lines of survey through this region that it was even better in quality than the reports of the explorers of the year 1900 led it to expect, has surveyed 120 townships, containing 2,625,000 acres. In addition to subdividing the townships, it has by survey blocked out in nine-mile townships one and one-half millions of acres more. The surveys were made that the country might be opened for immediate settlement, or as soon as circumstances made it judicious.

Tupper, the "War Horse."

Sir Charles Tupper justly earned the title of the War Horse of Cumberland. It was in his native county that, as a youth, he measured swords with the indomitable Howe and beat him. Having an extensive medical practice about Amherst, N.S., Sir Charles did considerable driving, using his doctor's gig, and it was in this vehicle that he campaigned in 1884, or fifty-seven years ago. The rig is still in the best of condition, and was used at the burlesque Horse Show given by the Pilgrims of Amherst recently.

The noble steed in the shafts was another old war horse. It is some twenty years of age and was a champion in weight-hauling contests several years ago.—Courier.

Duke Emigrates to Canada.

The Duke of Sutherland, who owns over a million and a quarter acres in the United Kingdom, is leaving England soon to reside at his new estate at Brooks, near Calgary, Alberta. He is establishing there a farm colony, which will be peopled with Scottish farmers.

Manitoba Salt Bed.

The largest bed of salt in the world is said to have been discovered at Fort McMurray, Manitoba. It is 200 feet deep and extends for 300 miles.

Lead the Dominion.

Calgary led every city in Canada in building permits during May, the value of permits taken out totalling $3,700,000.

Alligators.

Alligators are said to eat nothing in winter. Their diet is almost all meat, preferably liver. In cool weather they eat about once a week and in warm weather oftener.

WON BY A DRUM.

The Battle of Arcola a Romantic Episode of French History.

There stands in the French town of Cadenet, his native place, a monument to the memory of "The Little Drummer of Arcola," Andre Estienne, the hero of one of the most romantic episodes in French history. It was an episode that illustrated the extraordinary military value, so often attested by the world's greatest generals, of what Othello called the "spirit stirring drum." It may be said, curiously enough, that Napoleon Bonaparte's great career was built upon a drum, for the battle of Arcola was won by the beating of Estienne's drum, and the Corsican himself always dated his confidence in his own fortune from this battle, won in 1796. The circumstances were these:

Bonaparte, hemmed in with a small army at Verona, between two greatly superior forces, sallied out at night, made a forced march, and with 14,000 men fell upon the rear of 60,000 Austrians. The battle lasted seventy-two hours. On the second day of the fighting the Austrians obtained such a position that they completely and murderously swept the bridge of Arcola, which the French had gained and which they must hold if they expected to win the battle.

It was an unlooked for movement. No officer was near, but Andre Estienne, the little drummer, was there. He went to his sergeant and told him that he should cross the bridge with his drum and beat it on the other side.

"But," protested the sergeant, "before you place foot upon the bridge you will be killed. No man on earth could live on that bridge. However, can you swim?"

"I can," said the drummer.

"Then swim across, with your drum."

"Impossible!" returned Estienne. "Should the drum become water soaked I could not beat it on the other side."

But the sergeant was equal to this difficulty. Being himself a fine swimmer, he plunged into the water, bade Andre mount upon his shoulders and hold his drum clear of the water. In this way the two crossed the river, Andre beating his drum lustily all the way. Once on the other side, he pounded it in a way to well nigh wake the dead. The Austrians who were massed near were nearly all raw recruits. Hearing what they took to be the drums of an advancing force of French and remembering the terrible French onslaught of the day before, they fled. This left the bridge clear, and the French began to pour across. Andre was joined by other drummers. The Austrian flight became a rout. The French swept on, with Andre Estienne, still drumming, at their head. Soon the whole Austrian force was retreating, utterly beaten.

Years later Estienne's heroic act was celebrated by being represented in stone on the front of the Pantheon at Paris. The funeral of the little drummer of Arcola was attended by a great concourse of French officers and soldiers.

Capacity.

One would have it that a collie is the most sagacious of dogs, while the other stood up for the setter.

"I once owned a setter," declared the latter, "which was very intelligent. I had him on the street one day, and he acted so queerly about a certain man he met that I asked the man his name, and"—

"Oh, that's an old story!" the collie's advocate broke in sneeringly. "The man's name was Partridge, of course, and because of that the dog came to a set. Ho, ho! Come again!"

"You're mistaken," rejoined the other suavely. "The dog didn't come quite to a set, though almost. As a matter of fact, the man's name was Quayle, and the dog hesitated on account of the spelling."

Modern "Dew Ponds."

The ancient "dew ponds" of England have their modern counterparts on the rock of Gibraltar, where drinking water is obtained by the condensation of the abundant dew in especially prepared basins. The primitive process consists in making a hollow in the ground, and filling the bottom with dry straw, over which is placed a layer of clay. On a clear night the clay cools very rapidly, and the dew is condensed into water in the basin. The pond is improved by putting a layer of asphalt or Portland cement under the straw. At Gibraltar the present practice is to use wood instead of straw and sheet iron instead of clay.

A Storm Signal.

For the first time in his life he was braving the perils of the sea under the heavy handicap of high strung nerves and a weak stomach. The old stagers in the smoking room held him spellbound with soul-stirring stories of shipwreck and hurricane. Suddenly a sailor dropped a heavy block upon the deck.

"What's that?" he cried, paling.

"The barometer falling," answered a wag.

"Lord help us!" he moaned as he staggered away to his cabin.

Following a Precedent.

Writes a friend from Cannes: "I heard a story the other night at a dinner given here which is, I believe, a true one, and as it might amuse your readers I pass it on. A little boy wished to give a Bible to his mother on her birthday, and before writing her name on the flyleaf he took down a book from her shelf to see the proper way of setting about the matter. Literally copying the first inscription that he found, he wrote, 'With the kind regards of the author'."—London Gentlewoman.

Albino Animals in Japan.

It is noteworthy that albino animals are regarded by the Japanese in a superstitious light. The appearance of one is considered a good omen for the reigning mikado and occasionally signalizes a reign. For example, one reign is called "hakuchi nenkan," or period of the white pheasant; another the "haku hoo nenkan," or period of the phoenix.—London Globe.

Aztec Sorcerers.

The Aztecs had sorcerers whose especial business was to turn aside hailstorms from the maize crops and direct them to waste lands.

INSURING A NATION.

How It Is Proposed to Wipe Out Want in England by Legislation.

Over in England 14,000,000 workers are now expectantly awaiting results from a bill of great proportions recently submitted to the House of Commons by Lloyd George, Chancellor of the Exchequer. The bill stands great chances of being passed, and when that is done it will mean that Great Britain will become the disburser of nearly $160,000,000 a year to the working people, for it is a scheme of insurance that the bill encompasses.

In England the conditions of the working people are not as good as they are in this country. Often they are poorly paid and are forced to hunger and perhaps starvation when illness or accident takes them from their labors. It is this condition which Lloyd-George is attempting to ameliorate, and the national insurance scheme, it is believed, will help conditions greatly.

According to the bill every workman and work woman who earns less than $600 a year will be compelled to pay a premium of 6 cents a week. Added to this the employer will pay six cents a week for every person who works for him and the state will contribute four cents a week. Thus, when the person become ill and out of work, from the fund he will be entitled to the free services of a doctor and a money benefit of $2.50 a week for three months. After that time he will receive half that amount for another three months.

Then there is another phase of the working life of Great Britain which Lloyd-George's bill will touch. The death rate among children of the poorer people of England is abnormally high. This is due to the fact that mothers, because of poverty, are forced to go back to work, sometimes a week after their children are born, thereby bringing about a condition of artificial feeding. Seldom is there enough money to buy good milk. Often the babies die of starvation or of neglect. To provide against this there is to be an insurance by which a price of $7.50 is to be placed on the head of every infant and this will be paid on its birth, provided the mother stays away from work two weeks.

Then there is to be an insurance against non-employment—a tentative provision which is to be tried in two trades, engineering and building, and limited to 2,500,000 workmen. The employers and the employed are to pay five cents a week apiece, and then, when the worker is unemployed, he is to receive $1.50 a week for 15 weeks.

Many of the manufacturers of England are fighting the bill; others are strongly in favor of it.

England is not the first to use the national insurance. Germany for some time has had in effect a law which covers practically the same territory and it has been a success there. New Zealand, too, has tried the scheme with good results.

A New Fuel.

Recent extensive experiments in the production of a cheap fuel made from papyrus and other forms of reeds growing on and near the upper White Nile have proved very satisfactory, and companies have been formed to manufacture the fuel in large quantities.

The substance is known as "sudd," and this rank form of vegetation is reduced to a powder, which is pressed into bricks which are so solid they need no binding cords, and the new material is easily packed for transport. It is said to be much cheaper than coal, which is extensively used as fuel on the steamships and railways of the Nile region. If the project is a... represented, vast fortunes will result, for the supply is almost endless and the demand for fuel is ever increasing in that section, and coal must be imported from great distances.

Queen Mary's Ears Are Pierced.

It is because Queen Mary is never seen without earrings that so many smart women of to-day are wearing them. Her Majesty has a really fine collection of these ornaments, some of which are of great historic interest. Many fine pairs were bequeathed to the Queen by her late mother, Mary Duchess of Teck, who also had a great penchant for earrings. For day wear the Queen usually favors short earrings, generally of single stones which rest on the ear, but in the evening she adopts the picturesque long shape. Her ears are pierced in old-fashioned style, and she will have nothing to do with the screw fastenings which are almost universally used to-day.

Much Too Costly.

King George II. once wished to add the Green Park, in London, to his palace grounds, whether the people liked it or not. He inquired of his Minister as to the cost.

His lordship, mindful of the general discontent then prevalent, answered: "The cost, sir? Oh, it would be a matter of three crowns!"

The King took the hint. The people kept their park and the sovereign his triple throne.

She Knew Why.

"If you don't give me a shilling," said little Jimmy, "I shall tell that you kissed my sister."

"But, Jimmy," protested Mr. Softly, "I've never even thought about kissing your sister."

"Haven't you?" murmured little Jimmy in a puzzled tone. "Then I wonder why she told me to say that to you?"—London Tatler.

His Plunge.

Jasper—Gayboy seems to be prospering nowadays.

Jumpuppe—I don't see why you think so. His wife and family are not wearing any better clothes.

Jasper—Very true, but he is smoking better cigars.

Hit Back.

Mr. Youngwed (complacently)—I suppose you know there were a number of young ladies disappointed when I married you.

Mrs. Youngwed—Yes; my girl friends had prophesied a brilliant future for me.

"Nellie" Grant.

Ellen Wrenshall Grant, affectionately remembered by most American people as "Nellie" Grant, was the first child of a president to be married at the White House.

DON'T EAT GRASS OR MEAT.

Eat Only Raw Foods and Dr. Bell Says You Will Live a Century.

"Man is the only animal on the face of the earth who cooks his food and therefore destroys its value," Dr. Robert Bell said in a lecture on "Man's Natural Diet," delivered at Caxton hall. "If only we would take a lesson from wild animals by adopting the diet which nature has provided for us we should have a better, healthier and longer life."

But Dr. Bell does not advocate that mere man should imitate the tiger in the manner of his meals. "All flesh diet should be banned," he says, "and our food should consist entirely of vegetables, fruits, cereals and these cooked as little as possible." Dr. Bell would have children brought up in this way. He believes that children would be satisfied with whole meal bread, raw vegetables and fruit for their dinner and never crave for any other food if they were informed that it is good for their health and conducive to a green old age.

Dr. Bell strongly recommends raw peas as a delicious and a healthy dish. But he does not believe that nature intends man to eat grass. His teeth are not adapted to it. The lecturer added that every human being ought to attain an age of at least 125 years. "That there are so few centenarians among us," he said, "can certainly be attributed to our going against nature's decrees."—London Express.

Respectability of Cheese.

"I was present in the governor's office," says William Bayard Hale, describing a recent visit to Governor Woodrow Wilson in World's Work, "when he gave a hearing on a bill requiring the inspection and regulation of cold storage plants to a party of warehouse owners, who argued that the limit of storage (six months) proposed was too low.

"They were especially persistent in citing the case of cheese," says Mr. Hale, "which they urged might be kept several years and still be considered good.

"'Yes,' remarked the governor suavely, 'I am aware that cheese has its own standard of respectability.'"

WEDDING BELLS

DOWNING—SMART.

A very pretty wedding was celebrated at the home of Mr. and Mrs. J. T. Smart, 94 Lindsay Ave., Toronto, when their second daughter, Margaret E., was united in marriage to Mr. Albert J. Downing. Only the immediate relatives and very close friends witnessed the ceremony, which was performed by the Rev. John McIntosh, pastor of the Olivett Baptist church.

The bride entered the drawing room which was nicely decorated with ferns and roses, leaning on the arm of her father, by whom she was given away, the wedding march being played by Miss Letta M. Smart, niece of the bride.

The bride's wedding gown was a beautiful white marquesett dress, trimmed with white satin and guipuir lace. The bride and groom were unattended.

The many beautiful and costly presents received, testified to the high esteem in which the newly-married couple are held.

After congratulations had been extended, all sat down to a sumptuous supper.

The bride's travelling costume was a blue tailored suit with hat to match. The newly-married couple left for Alcott Beach and other points midst showers of confetti and good wishes.

Upon their return they will reside at 394 Pape avenue, East Toronto.

Amongst those present from Peterborough were Mr. and Mrs. O. S. Matchett and Mr. Geo. A. Goheen.

SOMETHING ABOUT HOGS

From Farm and Dairy.

Henry Coates, one of the most successful hog raisers of Kansas, claims that hogs on alfalfa pasturage, fed on a small grain ration, will do fat better than those fed on full feed of grain in dry lots. Mr. Coates says:

"Twenty-five years of pasturing hogs of all ages on alfalfa has proved to me conclusively that a fourth to a half grain ration while they are on such pasture will produce greater growth per day than when they are kept in dry lots and fed on full rations of corn. Hogs will maintain a reasonable growth, but not fatten enough for market on alfalfa pasture alone, therefore it is better to feed them with some grain while running on green alfalfa in order to make them profitable

"If it is desired to full feed hogs they will make a rapid fattening growth from increasing the grain ration while they are on the pasture, and with this grain and alfalfa combination, the meat will be nearly as firm as that of the hogs kept in the dry lot and fed on nothing but grain. I find no distinction on the market between alfalfa fed swine and those purely grain fed and they sell price and price alike. The general health of the alfalfa fed hog is equal to that of those maintained on any other feed and they are prolific."

MAKING CHEESE

From Farm and Dairy.

The system of making cheese as practised by Mr. E. A. Thompson of Atwood, Ont., who has taken highest awards for several years at Toronto and other leading exhibitions on his cheese may be briefly described as follows: He uses the acidimeter and the whey is usually partly run down at about .16 per cent. acidity. The agitators are then taken out and the curd stirred occasionally to keep it loose so that each cube of curd will firm individually. The curd is dipped at about .175 per cent. acidity with the whey half down in the vat. The whey is drawn with a large siphon so that the curd is gotten out of the whey in three minutes. After being dipped into the sink the curd is stirred dry. Emphasis is laid on this point. If after stirring until well dried the curd is found gathering moisture it is again broken up before being finally piled. The curds are stirred dry enough so that at dipping, from the six vats together, not enough moisture to reach the gutter would drain off the curd from milling to salting.

The curds are well flaked before milling and turned about every 10 or 15 minutes. Curds for show cheese are milled lengthwise. The general run of cheese usually however is milled the short way in order to be more easily handled. Curds milled the short way require less attention in the matter of stirring than when milled the long way and the results are practically the same. The curds are kept well stirred after milling. They are milled about 2¼ hours after dipping. The curds are matured well after milling and before salting. Salt is added in less than two and half hours after milling and is often left longer.

The 1910 exhibition cheese were salted at the rate of 2¼ lbs. a thousand. At the time of salting the curds are practically free of moisture, there being none dripping from the sink. Often at this stage enough whey cannot be secured to make a test for acidity. The average at salting when tests can be secured is 1.12 per cent.

All the cheese remain in the hoops 36 hours, or from the evening when put in until the second morning after. The press room is equipped with two sets of presses and hoops. After being taken from the hoops the cheese are left one day in the small drying room before being put in the cool curing room where all exhibition cheese are kept at a temperature of from 58 degrees to 60 degrees except June cheese which are held at a lower temperature after being sufficiently cured until shipped to the Shows. No difficulty has been found with mould developing in this cool curing room.

CANADIAN CHEESE

From Farm and Dairy.

The keen competition that Canadian cheese must meet on foreign markets renders the matter of quality in our cheese more important than ever. In days gone by when our cheese supplied 80 per cent. of the amount consumed in Great Britain, and had little or no competition, the quality was not so important, since almost any kind of cheese would sell.

Through factory inspection and new through makers' certificates we in Ontario have developed a class of makers who can turn out the finest cheese if they get good raw material. One of our dairy inspectors, Mr. R. W. Ward of Peterboro county, says that 80 per cent. of the defects in our cheese originate through the improper care of milk on the farm. It is apparent that our makers and instructors have here some work to do. It has been asked: Can the maker influence the quality of the milk that is received at his factory? Our best cheese makers say that they can. Mr. L. A. Zufelt, Superintendent of the Kingston Dairy School, speaking recently on this subject, said: "Give me the poorest factory in the poorest section of Canada and by putting in it a good maker, one who has both tact and backbone, I will guarantee that he will soon improve both the factory and the milk received to such an extent that he can turn out finest cheese."

Our dairy instructors in Ontario cover large territories. It is impossible for them to call on all the patrons and give instruction on the care of milk. The cheese maker, however, from the weighing stand, through the rural phone and by post, is constantly in touch with all of his patrons. It is within his power to completely transform the quality of milk received at the factory. The best maker is the one who is not only a cheese maker but an educator as well. The cheese maker by showing his patrons how to take better care of their milk adds to his own value and his work will be a boon to the dairy industry.

No Blame Attached.

New Hamburg, Sept. 1.—Upon resumption of the inquest before Coroner Marty yesterday on the death of Robert Spahr, who was found dead upon the G.T.R. near here last Friday morning, the following verdict was rendered: "That Robert Spahr came to his death by being run over by the train whilst lying unconscious across the railway track on the morning of Aug. 25, 1911, unconsciousness being caused by the result of a fall in a friendly scuffle at Berlin with Aaron Binkle, no blame being attached to Binkle or any other person."

May Lose License.

New York, Sept. 1.—Steps that may lead to the revoking of the license of the Madison Square Athletic Club, under whose auspices the fight was held Wednesday night between Matt Wells and "Knockout" Brown, were taken yesterday by Fire Commissioner Johnson. Patrick Powers, one of the fight managers, was served with a notice that in permitting 300 persons or more to stand in the arena during the bout, he had violated a provision of the city charter.

May Be One of Martin's Crew.

Wiarton, Sept. 1.—The decomposed body of a boy was found floating in the lake by Capt. Burke of the barge Chamberlain, 13 miles off Cape Croker and brought here Wednesday night.

Dr. Fisher, the coroner, believes the body has been in the water nearly two weeks, and in that case the lad may have been one of the victims of the ill-fated tug Martin of Midland, lost off Point au Baril, on Monday, August 21st.

Planing Factory Burned.

Lindsay, Sept. 1.—Yesterday morning the planing factory of the Gull River Lumber Co. at Coboconk was totally destroyed by fire; origin unknown. The sawmill and shingle mill were in great danger, but were saved by the efforts of the bucket brigade. The loss is estimated at over $4,000. A Grand Trunk car on the siding was partly destroyed.

New Auto Badly Burned.

Acton, Sept. 1.—Some excitement was caused Wednesday night when a new auto owned by Mr. Fred. Storey, of the W. H. Storey Glove Co., was destroyed by fire. Ernest Macklin, mechanician, who was running the car, dropped a match on some recently spilled gasoline. The car is almost a total loss.

Seen the Aeroplane Hats?

Chicago, Sept. 1.—The science of aviation is to be the chief influence on designs for woman's headgear next winter, according to the National Association of Retail Milliners, which opened its fall convention here on Wednesday night. Like the aeroplanes, the hats will be based on two distinct designs, monoplanes, with single sprouts of plumes, and biplanes. In the display of winter styles, such names are found as "Sky stars," the "Volplane turban," and the "Rainbow spiral," a particularly giddy effect in many colors.

Caught Runaway.

Toronto, Sept. 1.—Elwood Oles, one of the five boys who escaped from the Mimico Industrial School last January, was arrested at the exhibition grounds yesterday. As luck would have it, he came to see the fair on the very day when the boys from the Mimico School had their annual visit there and Oles was spotted by his former schoolmates. It was not a very loyal act on their part when they told the detectives of his whereabouts.

Since his escape, Oles has been in many places, including Brantford and Detroit.

KIT'S COLUMN

Some Comments on Strikes.

Not long ago a man looking at the moving coronation pictures remarked to his companion, "And this is what the Socialists would destroy! This pomp of empire, all these decorations, this wealth."

But it is a moot question whether all this exploitation of wealth, this money tossed into automobiles, women's furs, their diamonds and pearls, all this profusion of wealth scattered with a lavish hand does not anger the soul of the man who seeks work and cannot find it, or the man who works for a wage so low that it barely keeps his growing family alive. Well fed and cared for his children are not and cannot be. Healthy environment, that atmosphere which is so necessary to the making of sterling character, they cannot have. Every day is a struggle to bridge it with the next. The price of one of those great jewels which women flash from their coronets would be sufficient to keep in decency the little family, but until that mirage, the millenium, arrives, the diamonds and rubies, the silken garments, the pomp and circumstance which are the appendages of the rich will remain where they are.

There was no flash of jewels, no glittering procession about the great strike which so recently threatened the very lives of the people. When the Liverpool women broke the bakers' windows and seized the bread for their hungry children an echo of the French Revolution reverberated through England. When you remember, in these progressive days, that these thousands of working men went on strike to get one shilling more in wages; that they were working for less than nine dollars a week, that, although the cost of living and of clothing may not be as high in Britain as here, yet is higher than it ever was, save in days of absolute famine, yours would be but a narrow heart indeed did it not hold some measure of sympathy with Labour in its struggle against Capital.

Over here a strike is not so serious a matter as it is in the old country, for here we are young, we are prosperous, and Hope abounds in the very air. Not long since a traveling Englishman remarked upon this hopeful aspect. "It is the very faces of the people over here," he said. "Everybody looks as if he had some big interest in life, a share in the country which he was watching and exploiting."

"It is not so in the old land, especially in cities like London and Liverpool. There exists a dense population of unemployed who see, with growing anger, the rich growing ever richer while they are ground into the dirt by poverty and idleness. Their wants are never looked into. No wave of prosperity ever breaks upon their arid shores. Behind those sanded streets where the procession of royalty went its glittering way to England's hoary abbey lay poverty unspeakable and its companions—filth and crime. Who can say that the exploitation of wealth and aristocracy which England has lately known, did not help to create the terrific struggle in which law and order went to the wall and men were shot down in the streets.

The indomitable spirit of the Anglo-Saxon and the Celt cannot forever endure without revolt the frightful grinding of the rich upon the poor. It was the indomitable spirit that manifested itself under Wat Tyler in his rebellion against the poll-tax half a thousand years ago. In that case the matter was brought to a head by the brutal rudeness of the poll-tax collector to Tyler's daughter, but it was the match to the smouldering elements that were ready to jump into flame. Good old Wat killed the collector and raised his rebellion. Of course it came to a heart-breaking end, and Tyler lost his life and 1500 of his followers. But what of that? Did it not show that men even in that day, before the dawn of liberty and progress as we know them, were not prepared to lie down and be trampled upon? Is the lesson of the French revolution forgotten? That terrible upheavel; that cry for liberty and fair dealing which filled the end of the century with the spirit of freedom, so that poets sang of it, and a mighty wave of passionate love of freedom swept the world. Go back to those years of oppression which preceded the Great Terror, and we find the nation living in smothered rage. "At last," says Carlyle, "the women sew tents and coats, the children scrape surgeon's lint, the old men sit in the market place; able men are on the march; all men in requisition. From town to town flutters on the heaven's winds, this banner—the French people risen against tyrants."

It may take time and it assuredly will take tears and blood, but in these days the organization that declines reasonable arbitration has signed its own death warrant, and though the sentence may be suspended, it will ultimately and inflexibly be carried out.

I know all about the weaknesses of trade-unionism, the jingoism, and the curse of demagogues who shamelessly betray the cause of Labour. I know how impracticable Labor can be when it is choked with its own gorge. But nobody can go back over the history of this modern factor in life and not feel that trade-unionism is here to stay. Those who say it is not cannot have studied that law of evolution which through the centuries has been quietly moulding the life of nations. Since its rise, trade-unionism, in spite of bad leaders, of mistakes and disasters, has lived on. Especially in its early years it had against it the capitalists and all whom they commanded; the employers, the aristocrats, the newly-rich, the self-appointed public instructor who raises his voice in "letters to the editor," and the whole of the genteel classes. Even after 1824 a workman might be arrested at the instance of his employer on a warrant for alleged breach of contract, and taken to prison before the case had been tried, while down to 1825 any combination of workmen for their own protection was unlawful. Fifty years passed away, and assuredly they were years of trouble and fierce antagonism; but when, in 1875, the British parliament recognized trade-unionism it was after the fullest discussion of that subject which could possibly be given to it.

The stoppage of Labour through the obstinancy of Capital necessarily affects the public. And in ironic fashion it affects most deeply the poor. Many suffer acutely. The old and feeble and weakling young go under when there is no fuel to heat the house, no bone to put in the soup pot. As Winston Churchill put it the other day, "It is not the rich who will suffer. Money will always be able to buy what it wants. It is the poor, the women and the children who will be injured and are being injured by this strike." That is the irony of strikes. Yet when were the women heard to murmur? Who does not recognize this amazing quality in Woman; that in big things, in sudden accidents, in the crash which ruin brings, in great crises of any kind, she will remain silent. When the strike comes and the cupboard does not, like that of old Mother Hubbard's, contain even a bone for the dog, the woman does not complain. She acts. As in the French revolution, as in Liverpool the other day, she marches straight to the bread shop and takes what her starving children are crying for at home. Patient, long-standing of oppression and insult, forbearing when the hardest, the most cruel of circumstances are crowding heavily upon her—upon her who is the homekeeper, therefor the nation-keeper—there comes a moment when the barriers will fall—as they fell at the outbreak and clamour of the women of Paris in the first moments of the horrible revolution. Then the woman acts.

It was when we read of the assault upon the bread shops of Liverpool by the women that we knew the strike was a serious one—one of heavy import, over, happily, for the time, but significant of the terrible struggle that might engulf overwhelm society. We may never expect equality. That is Utopian. But some adjustment, some balance between Labour and Capital, the employer and the employee; some settlement once and for all of a fair and decent wage, and set hours of labour, is fast becoming an imperative necessity.

HIS MISTAKE

"Mary has given notice. She says you called her the most disgusting names through the 'phone this morning."

"Good heavens! I thought I was speaking to you, pet!"—London Opinion.

THE FAMILY HEARTH

The home where "Good morning" and "Good night" are carefully said by one to another, are the homes of the world where good thoughts are generated, where good deeds have place, and from whence go out good lives.

• •

A happy home is the brightest spot on earth that the eye of God looks down upon. Love and peace in his home sends sunshine around the man wherever he goes; disorder and trouble there is misery everywhere.

• •

Let the ungrateful world sneer at the maiden aunt, but God has a throne burnished for her arrival, and on one side of that throne in Heaven there is a vase containing two jewels, the one brighter than the Kohinoor of London Tower, and the other larger than any diamond ever found in the districts of Golconda—the one jewel by the lapidary of the palace cut with the words "Inasmuch as ye did it to father," the other jewel by the lapidary of the palace cut with the words, "Inasmuch as ye did it to mother."

• • •

To guard our sons and daughters from evil, or at least to maintain at the very core of their being an ally against all contaminating touch and harmful counsel let us win their confidence when they are little, cultivate it as they grow up, and preserve it always. There is no taliaman more magical, no better means of overcoming the difficulties of education that arise from the changing age of our children. As time goes on, authority is modified perforce. If you desire to educate your children in freedom, your authority must be felt less and less, and at last efface itself altogether. Confidence on the contrary, must persist. How many parents do not comprehend this! Excellent at educating nurslings and guiding childhood they continue to treat their children the same at all ages; they steal away their power of initiative, stifle their aspirations, and by the very act of clinging to a passing authority, let perish a confidence which might have been constant. Nor is it enough to be resigned to seeing the will and personal force of our children establish themselves, we should welcome with joy all the signs of budding character, and as far as it can possibly be wise, give free play to the spirit of independence and enterprise. Do not hinder the man's being formed in the child.

• • •

There are few worries of life which a man cannot now and then shake off but who can shake himself free from the skeleton in the closet, from the worry of the household, a blister on the heart. A day will tell how many a man carried that with him without wincing down to the grave. When husband and wife are helpmate to each other in the best sense; when order and love and goodness prevail in the house. Then the man who has a hard battle in life to fight can leave his struggles behind him when he enters there. With all our faults we are the most home loving of people.

There is one very noticeable feature about boys that has been gained by observation, and in nine cases out of ten, these observations prove correct. Every town school has its "bad boys," generally not many, rarely less than three nor more than five. After their first two years, of they have passed the primary and this troublesome disposition begins to crop out and they soon become the chief annoyance, and though there are but one or two, they keep things in an uproar and almost ruin every good intent of the school. And thus they go on severely taxing teachers as to know what course to pursue. They forbear with them much, persuade not a little and try all means and methods to win them to a course of right, but it seems all in vain. Thus these boys put in a few years of school life and their away, but their course in the world is no better than when in school. These few "bad boys" become the annoyance of the town, and now the authorities are put to their "wits end" to know what to do with them. Parents, perhaps, highly respectable, honourable, and among the best, for their sakes much is forebourne—much overlooked; but these boys go right on despite pleadings or warnings and next day they are before our courts — and next would be behind the bars but for the influence of friends and money.

• • •

Why is it that we so easily forget that the little things in life are what make it easy or hard? A few pleasant words, a warm hand clasp, a cordial letter, are simple things, but they are mighty in their influence on the live of those about us, adding a ray of hope to many disconsolate hearts, giving a bit of courage to disappointed, weary ones, and helping to make our own lives sweeter at the same time.

• • •

What is needed is, that at home and at school, our girls are taught that to shine in social circles or to roll in wealth is not the highest aim of womanhood. But let them be taught to make a home joyful and happy, and yet be prepared, if necessary, for life's bitterest struggles. Let them understand thoroughly the details of every-day life, the value of all kinds of commodities used daily, how to make a check, draft, note and receipt. Let them be told the truth about themselves and about the world. They should know something about the snares and pitfalls that beset them.

When one is inclined to worry, the remark of an old lady should be recalled: "Yes dearies; I've had an awful heap of trouble in my time, and most of it never happened."

THREE WAYS TO COOK TOMATOES.

Canned tomatoes.—Peel plump, medium sized tomatoes—any desired quantity and put them in glass jars without bruising; pack up to the top and pour over them enough stewed tomatoes, boiling hot, to fill. Partially tighten the lids, set on dripping pan on several thicknesses of newspaper, add warm water and cook in oven until tomatoes are thoroughly hot—about ten minutes. Tighten and set away. The tomatoes may be used as fresh ones in the winter, and the juice may be used in soups and sauces.

Spiced Tomato Sauce.—Melt a lump of butter size of a nutmeg, and pour in one cupful of tomatoes. Add salt to a pinch of cayenne, slice of onion, a dust of flour, and a pinch of ground cloves and cinnamon. Stew slowly one hour, then strain and add a teaspoonful of vinegar. This is delicious on meats.

Chili Sauce. — Thirty-eight ripe tomatoes, twelve large onions, ten green peppers, three cups sugar, one pint of vinegar, one-quarter cup salt. Wash and slice tomatoes and onions, remove seeds from peppers and cut peppers in small pieces. Add other ingredients, mix well and boil about two and a half hours.

• • •

Stuffed Peaches.—Pare and halve peaches and remove stones. Chop fine an equal quantity of almonds and English walnuts. Fill the halves with these and fasten together with tiny toothpicks. Sprinkle four or five tablespoonfuls of sugar over them, and set in a saucepan with a little water. Steam ten minutes and allow to cool. Chill and serve both with sugar and cream.

Peaches En Surprise.—Scald a few large free-stone peaches, and chill them thoroughly. Just before serving peel carefully with a silver knife, and remove pits with a spoon. Have ready at hand cream which has been sweetened and scented and thoroughly chilled. Mix with the cream the meats of pecan nuts, chopped. Fill the peaches with the mixture, garnish with candied cherries, and serve at once.

Peache Russe.—Soak one tablespoonful granulated gelatine in one-fourth cup cold water for ten minutes and dissolve in one-third cup powdered sugar and one teaspoonful vanilla extract. Allow it to set over cold water, stirring slightly. Then cut and fold tightly into the whips from three cups of medium cream. Serve in tall glasses with quarters of fresh pared peach arranged point up around the outside and fill with the russe mixture. Chill thoroughly before serving.

Make all the World Seem Brighter

There is a sense of insecurity to those whose sight is dim. Some persons run the chance of injuring their eyes through the want of glasses. Many tell us it is a brighter better world since they were supplied with suitable glasses. We help persons daily to brightness and comfort.

RACE FOR A THIEF

Wild Chase Through the Streets in the Heart of London.

A DETECTIVE'S QUICK WORK.

The Police Officer Was Not Only Rapid Himself, but Compelled an Unsuspecting Bystander to Join in the Mad Flight and Capture.

In defending the London police from charges of incompetency a contributor to Blackwood's Magazine narrates an incident in which he figured a few years ago, when he accompanied his wife to a Bond street jeweler's, where she went in to match some pearls and have some gems reset, he awaiting her on the street, where he smoked his cigar. He says:

"I noticed three well dressed men go into the shop and several women, when suddenly one of the well dressed men came out through the glass doors of the shop and pushed rapidly past me as he turned up the street. At the same moment I was seized violently by the arm by a milkman who had been arranging his cans on his handcart just in front of the shop.

"'Quick, governor!' he shouted. 'After him or we lose him! Look; he's passed the bag to a pal!'

"Now, for the life of me I cannot tell you what impelled me. I'm not the kind of man that you can picture tearing up Bond street in the wake of an agitated milkman. But there was something in the grip that man took of my arm that impelled me, so that I threw away my cigar and ran after the man with the bag neck and neck with the milkman, who exhorted me to continue in my efforts by shouting:

"'Throw a leg, governor! If we lose him we lose him forever!'

"We tore up Conduit street. I don't know what the passersby thought. I had no time to think of them. When we reached Regent street our quarry dived into the traffic like a frog into a mill race. We went in after him. How I missed being knocked down I don't know. The milkman took the same risks. We were across almost as soon as the man and sped after him. I don't know what streets we doubled down. I knew that at this period it flashed across my mind that I was making a conspicuous ass of myself. Here I was racing down the slums of Soho at the bidding of a strange milkman, who never stopped in his exhortations to me.

"'Keep it up and we'll get him!'

"Our quarry, doubled and tacked, but we stuck to him till just as we were passing down the very worst looking street of the lot he suddenly slipped into a low house, of which the door was open. My milkman never lost a second. He whispered hoarsely in my ear:

"'Stop here, governor, and grab the first person as comes out of that house, no matter who he is! I know the way behind.'

"In a flash he was gone. He had slipped down an alleyway and disappeared. I felt a real fool, and the whole folly of my action rushed in upon me. I had left my wife stranded in a shop in Bond street. I had lost my hat and my stick, and here I was in an almost deserted street, standing outside a door waiting with orders from a strange man to grab the first person that came out of it. In two seconds more I would have left the place and gone to the nearest hatter, a wiser and chastened man.

When Blood Was Impure

The Old-Fashioned Doctor Brought Relief by Bleeding

To-day We Keep the Blood Pure by Using

DR. CHASE'S KIDNEY-LIVER PILLS

The doctor of a century or two ago was accustomed to free his patient of an excess of poisoned blood by the cruel process of bleeding.

We would not stand for that heroic treatment to-day, because we understand better the work of the liver and kidneys and how to awaken them to their duty of filtering poisons from the blood.

These are the only organs of the body which filter poisons from the blood, and so cleanse the system of the foul waste matter which causes pains, aches and dangerous diseases, and there is no way you can so quickly bring the liver and kidneys into action as by using Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills.

Don't imagine that a liquid medicine is necessary to purify the blood. The supreme test is, "Does the treatment awaken the action of the liver and invigorate the kidneys?" Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills are unique in their combined action on the liver, kidneys and bowels, and on this account wonderfully successful as a means of purifying the blood.

The whole digestive and excretory system is cleansed and invigorated by this treatment. The appetite is sharpened, digestion improves, and the tired, languid feelings of a poisoned system give way to new health and vigour. One pill a dose. 25 cents a box at all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto.

SHE SUFFERED FIVE YEARS

Finally Cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Erie, Pa.—"I suffered for five years from female troubles and at last was almost helpless. I went to three doctors and they did me no good, so my sister advised me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and when I had taken only two bottles I could see a big change, so I took six bottles and I am now strong and well again. I don't know how to express my thanks for the good it has done me and I hope all suffering women will give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial. It was worth its weight in gold."—Mrs. J. P. ENDLICH, R. F. D. No. 7, Erie, Pa.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from native roots and herbs, contains no narcotic or harmful drugs, and to-day holds the record for the largest number of actual cures of female diseases we know of, and thousands of voluntary testimonials are on file in the Pinkham laboratory at Lynn, Mass., from women who have been cured from almost every form of female complaints, such as inflammation, ulceration, displacements, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, indigestion and nervous prostration. Every suffering woman owes it to herself to give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial.

If you want special advice write Mrs. Pinkham, Lynn, Mass., for it. It is free and always helpful.

But just at that moment a boy of about fifteen came out of the door. My milkman must have left his spell upon me, for I immediately threw my arms around him.

"'Lemme go, governor!' he shouted. 'I ain't done nuffin' to you!'

"He struggled hard, and the more he struggled the more I felt impelled to hold him. And then suddenly, as if by magic, two policemen appeared on the scene and seized my boy for me. My milkman, wreathed in smiles, appeared in the doorway from which the boy had just come, saying blithely and quite respectfully:

"'You've done that very well, sir. We've got the other two inside.' He then added, 'I'll just put my hands over this young feller.'

"He took off the boy's battered hat, and out of the lining came a roll of £80 in Bank of England notes. He then went through the boy's clothes and produced out of his socks a pair of ruby and diamond earrings which, to my astonishment, I saw were the very gewgaws that my wife had taken with her to have reset. The detective, for my milkman was nothing less, then pinched the boy's ear and said:

"'Where's the lady's bag?'

"'In the yard, sir,' he answered sullenly enough.

"The milkman retrieved it, and, sure enough, it was my wife's bag.

"'But,' I said to the detective, 'how did you know that I was connected with the lady who owns this bag?'

"'It's our business to know a few things,' he said. 'But if you hadn't been game to run we should have lost the lot. We were only just in time.'

"We left the boy and the two men in the house in the custody of constables and took a cab back to Bond street, and here the strangest part of the story comes in. We found my wife still discussing her pearls with the jeweler, quite unconscious of the fact that her bag was gone."

Over the Wires.

There are more than a billion calls a year over the telephones of New York.

The telegraph wires of the United States would wrap around the world 500 times.

A moisture, gas and even explosion proof telephone for use in mines has been invented.

Of the 7,500,000 telephones installed in the United States 500,000 are located in hotel bedrooms.

Trust Thrusts.

Step up behind any trust official, yell "Washington!" and see him jump.—Wall Street Journal.

We are going to have thirty-five little Standard Oil companies instead of one big one, and that'll be about all.—Baltimore Sun.

Speaking of the trusts, John K. Parsons says "all such wrongs right themselves," but let's tip them over first and see if they will.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

Short Stories.

Bullets were formerly made of stone.

There are few authenticated cases of great longevity in the torrid zone.

A lucky fellow is the physician who attends the empress of Russia. For each visit he makes he receives a fee of $350.

The wealth of the Rothschilds is put at $2,000,000,000. This is four times the probable wealth of all the Rockefellers. At 4 per cent the yearly income from the present Rothschild fortune would be $80,000,000.

REBEL WHO CAME BACK

DR. WOLFRED NELSON HAD MANY FINE QUALITIES.

Interesting Ceremony at Sorel Recently of the Re-interment of the Body of Papineau's Associate Recalls the Life of a Well-Loved Man—Came Back From Exile to Serve a United Dominion.

In the old and interesting town of Sorel there recently took place the re-interment of the remains of a man, who, in his time, played a conspicuous and somewhat dramatic part in the affairs of one of the most stirring periods of our history, whose name was once a household word, and whose memory is still held dear by thousands and respected by all who know the story of his eventful life. That man was Doctor Wolfred Nelson, one of the leaders of the insurrection in Lower Canada in the autumn of 1837.

His associates and followers in what speedily proved to be a forlorn hope and a lost cause, called him a patriot; those who represented constitutional authority called him a rebel, and such he was in the eyes of the law; but whether patriot or rebel, both friends and foes had to admit that he played his part in that unfortunate venture like a man, true to the cause for which he stood, true to the men whose co-operation he had enlisted, and brave enough to share danger with those whom he and other leaders had induced to leave their peaceful farms, and stake life and fortune upon rebellion by force of arms.

For many years the remains of this remarkable man had reposed in the old cemetery of the Anglican Church at Sorel. A new cemetery was recently established, and a few days ago relatives, one or two grey-haired contemporaries, and a goodly company of citizens of the present generation assembled to pay their respect to the memory of the dead, and to bear his remains to a new and more suitable resting place. The interest taken in the event showed how large and permanent is the place assigned to Doctor Wolfred Nelson in the history of the old Province of Lower Canada.

Wolfred Nelson, was born in Montreal on July 10, 1792, the year of the first Parliamentary election in Lower Canada. At the age of fourteen he was apprenticed to Dr. Carter, of the army medical staff at Sorel, known as Fort William Henry, and there he was trained for the medical profession. In January, 1811, his apprenticeship ended, and having passed his licensing examination at Montreal, he began the practice of his profession at the village of St. Denis, on the east bank of the Richelieu, and about twenty-five miles north of Sorel.

In the following year the war with the States came on, and the young surgeon volunteered for service in the ranks, but he was compelled to take the surgeoncy of a militia regiment, and in that capacity he served until peace was restored. A few years later he was in public life, an ardent reformer, who, a few years later, was carried by his zeal for the cause of popular institutions into the leadership of an armed force bent on overthrowing the Government of the province.

Passing over the many years of agitation that led up to the insurrection, let us come to the crisis in which Dr. Nelson played the part of "hero."

Before November, 1837, was far advanced "the heather was on fire." Fearing arrest in Montreal, Papineau fled to St. Denis, and sought refuge with Dr. Nelson, "who was exceedingly popular from his amiability of character, from being a medical man, and also from his prosperous circumstances, as he was the owner of a distillery in that village."

At St. Denis a large number of the residents of the surrounding district at once assembled, bringing with them such firearms as they possessed, and prepared, under the leadership of Papineau and Nelson, to stake their lives for the patriot cause.

On November 22 Col. Gore, with 250 men and a 12-pound howitzer, proceeded from Montreal to Sorel by boat, with orders to advance to St. Denis, and disperse the insurgents. That night the rain fell heavily, and the roads were almost knee-deep with mud. Over these roads Gore marched his weary men, appearing before St. Denis at about nine o'clock in the forenoon.

Nelson had made preparations to resist attack. A barricade was thrown across the road and men were stationed in the stone distillery and in a stone house nearby, which formed the key of the rebel position. The attack of the troops, it will be remembered, was beaten off, and after fighting four and a half hours Gore retreated, leading his exhausted and half-famished men back to Sorel. The interesting facts of the fight are those which have to do with the conduct of Papineau and Nelson when under fire.

It is doubtful if Papineau was under fire; if so, not for any length of time, for early in the fray, and possibly before it actually commenced, he mounted a horse and rode from the field of glory, leaving his followers, whom his eloquence had roused to action, to gather the laurels and face the dangers without his leadership or encouragement.

Dr. Nelson was one of those whom Lord Durham banished to Bermuda. The ordinance under which the banishment had been made was disallowed by the British Government, and the exiles were released. In November, 1838, or about one year after his victory at St. Denis, Dr. Nelson left Bermuda for New York, where he continued to reside and practice his profession until 1843, when he returned to Montreal "to begin the world anew, having lost all his fine property by fire."

In 1845 he was elected to represent Richelieu County in opposition to the great Mr. D. B. Viger, and he held the seat through two Parliaments. Afterwards he declined nomination, and in 1851 he was made Inspector of Prisons.

"The Ungodly Cough."

"You never know where he is going to break out next," someone once said regarding Rev. R. J. Campbell, pastor of the City Temple, who is about to visit Canada on a preaching tour. This person was referring particularly to Mr. Campbell's somewhat unconventional remarks. On one occasion he addressed his hearers upon the timely subject of congregational coughing, and assured them that there was such a thing as "the ungodly cough." Then, again, he one day stopped his congregation singing that hymn, "O, Beautiful My Country," saying that the compilers of the hymn book had spoilt it by altering the tune. And then, breaking into song, he sang the lines as he thought they should be written. The applause which greeted this musical effort was tremendous. Apparently, however, Mr. Campbell, does not consider himself to be the broadminded man his admirers imagine, for, when he was asked if he was likely to stay abroad, he replied, "I am such a narrow, bigoted John Bull that I am afraid I couldn't be comfortable in any country but my own."

The Lord Great Chamberlain.

It was announced some weeks ago that Lord Carrington, who recently celebrated his sixty-eighth birthday, would act as Lord Great Chamberlain at the crowning of King George. His lordship stands in high favor at court, and is exceedingly popular throughout the country. He is a model landlord, and a man who has always used the advantages of his position and wealth for the benefit of the community at large. He is probably the only peer who derives his income entirely from agriculture. "I let my tenants farm as they like, shoot what they like, pay when they like, and vote as they like," he once said. He is a great believer in girls learning to cook. "Good cookery," he has remarked, "is one of the secrets of domestic happiness. Lady Carrington has looked after our house and given myself and the family a most excellent dinner every day since our marriage a good many years ago. If every other wife would strive to do the same we should hear less about unhappy marriages.

Traffic Regulations in Paris.

An iron structure with semaphore arms has been erected in the center of the square at Montmartre, where the traffic is very heavy at all hours of the day. The apparatus is fitted with four signal arms, and these can be seen at a considerable distance. Drivers of vehicles arriving on the square will halt if the signal is against them and wait for a white disk to be shown before proceeding. At night red and green lights will replace the red and white disks of daytime.

A FAMOUS OLD BEACON.

St. Agnes Light, Off the British Coast, is to Disappear.

One of the oldest and most famous lighthouses in the world is to disappear. According to an official notice to mariners, the St. Agnes light, Scilly, is to be replaced by a light on Peninnis head, St. Mary. For centuries it has gladdened the eyes of passengers from the other side of the Atlantic or has blinked a parting to emigrants.

It stands inland on the highest ground in the island of St. Agnes, and the first light was lit on the spot as long ago as 1680. Coal was the only illuminant, and the light was often allowed to go out. But in 1790 oil lamps and reflectors were installed, and flashes of the present one-minute revolving light can be seen at a distance of thirty miles.

Probably one of the chief motives which prompted the placing of a guiding light on the island was the reputation which St. Agnes bore for wrecking in the old days. Many a ship was lured on the rocks by false lights, and the tradition was preserved among seamen for many years afterward.

It is stated that almost within living memory a crew who were shipwrecked on the island kept their would be rescuers at bay with stones. They feared that they would be massacred and could be approached only when they dropped helpless from hunger and exhaustion.

The new light will be exhibited from a circular iron tower which will be painted white and will be forty-five feet in height.—Pall Mall Gazette.

INSULTS IN GERMANY.

Calling a Native an Englishman is Punished With a Fine.

According to a New York lawyer who recently returned from Berlin, even the mildest sort of personal epithets are dangerous things to use in Germany. The use of pet names of the same class as our "gink" or "bonehead" may land the author in the courts, and if found guilty he is liable to a fine.

"A certain Dr. Eissel, hailing from Bohemia," said the New Yorker, "has just prosecuted in the courts a rival who had beat him at chess for the offense of beleidigung. Beleidigung means 'offense' or insult.' Daily you read of cases of hitherto stainless citizens being fined for using such abuse as 'good for nothing,' 'loafer' and 'sheep's head.' Recently a policeman was prosecuted for calling a man whose address he was taking a 'fellow' (kerl). Not until there had been two appeals and trials in three different instances was the prosecutor satisfied. The man who beat Dr. Eissel at chess was even more obtusely vituperative, for he hurled at his horrified enemy the intolerable epithet 'Engländer.'

"In court Dr. Eissel characterized this insult as 'severe' and declared that he was not an Englishman and had never been in England. He was merely an Anglomaniac, who wore English clothes, had a son at an English school and had learned 'boxen.' The court gave him a verdict, and the offender, therefore, was fined."—New York Mail.

London Slang.

If some London slang has a short life the street sayings current for a time pass away even more quickly. Most of these, such as "Has your mother sold her mangle?" "Who shot the dog?" and "How are you off for soap?" survive only in the pages of contemporary novelists. Some, however, have a long life. "Does your mother know you're out?" has been traced back to 1840 and may possibly have been current before then. Others are revived, with slight alterations. Ten years ago rude little boys would shout, "Where did you get that hat?" when their grandfathers would exclaim, "What, the same old hat!" And the expression of dissent emphasized nowadays by "Not in these trousers!" used to be conveyed thirty years ago by the tag "Not in these boots!"—London Chronicle.

An Eye to the Future.

"Good morning, ma'am. Can't I sell you a preparation warranted to kill rats and mice?"

"I think not. There hasn't been a rat or a mouse on the premises for more than two years."

"You'll have some before long. I've just sold the neighbors on both sides of you some stuff they wanted to kill off your seven cats with, and it'll do it, ma'am."

BUILDING RAMPANT.

Gains in Canadian Cities Are Greatest in Years.

For the first time in several years Toronto has fallen to second place among the cities of Canada in the monthly building returns compiled by Construction. This is for the month of May.

The figures indicate that building activity is veritably rampant throughout the country. At no previous time, considering the large list of cities reporting, have the gains been greater in number, or the individual increases of more striking magnitude.

Calgary's heavy investment, amounting to $3,616,812, shows a remarkable state of development, as does also Toronto total of $2,643,755, and Vancouver's amount of $2,488,050. In fact, all sections with the seven exceptions previously noted, experienced a most marked advance. Winnipeg, where new work amounting to $2,229,480 was undertaken, reversed the less favorable condition of the previous month. Brandon, in the same province, with an investment of over half a million, is 166 per cent. ahead. In Saskatchewan, Regina, with a total of $1,036,190, jumped forward 160 per cent.; Prince Albert advanced 740 per cent., and Moose Jaw annexed a gain of 44 per cent. Other western gains are Edmonton, 178 per cent.; Medicine Hat, 89 per cent., and Victoria, 11 per cent. North Vancouver, while not submitting comparative figures, indicates by her amount of $58,068, a very wholesome condition.

A notable feature of the month was the marked reversal of conditions in the Eastern Maritime district Halifax, Sydney and St. John, which were behind the two previous months, are all on the "upside," the former noting an advance of 207 per cent. and the latter two places gains of 378 and 30 per cent. in order named.

In Quebec, aside from Montreal's total and the figures of Westmount, which gives a gain of 23 per cent., statistics are unavailable, although it is definitely known that Quebec City and a number of the smaller municipalities undertook a substantial amount of work. This also is true of other unheard-from centres in the various other provinces, many of which are establishing new records with each succeeding month.

As to the immediate outlook, it might be said that at no time in the past has there been so much important work in prospect. June, July and August should record tremendously large totals, although labor troubles which threaten at the present time might interfere to some extent with operations in one or two important centres.

The Rabbi's Retort.

Rev. Solomon Jacobs, rabbi of Holy Blossom Synagogue, is one of the easiest and most pleasant of Toronto's prominent citizens to interview if he is approached at the proper time and in the proper manner. Some time ago, however, a woman reporter called upon him to ask for information about the Jews and Jewish customs, and found him very "different."

She asked him—for she had been at his synagogue—what the ark and the Hebrew words over it signified. Having had it explained that the Ark of the Covenant is the place where the scrolls are kept, and that the words were the ten commandments, she followed up with a lot more questions until the rabbi was a little tired. The lady thought it queer that he volunteered no information. But presently he did.

"We have a Christian lady to play the organ," he observed.

"Indeed," answered the interviewer, "and why is that, pray?"

"Oh," said the rabbi, "it's work, and we never allow our Jews to work on the Sabbath."

And with that he terminated the interview.—Toronto Star Weekly.

NEVER SAW ST. HELENA.

That's the Latest French Story About the Great Napoleon.

What if Napoleon never saw St. Helena?

What if he fooled the English to the last and died, as he lived, a free man?

"Absurd!" you exclaim. Tons of literature, written in every language of modern civilization, tell you he did die a prisoner on that rocky island. You believe in it as you believe in the Fourth of July or in Thanksgiving day. It is a hard, solid fact, which nobody ever doubts.

And yet a very distinguished French historian has been doubting it for years and has searched for proofs to back his doubts for a decade. Finally he has boldly declared to the world that history for once is wrong.

M. Omessa, the historian in question, boldly declares that Napoleon I., after losing all on the field of Waterloo, refused to give himself up to the hated English, escaped to Italy and, instead of himself, sent his double, Private Robeant, to St. Helena, in accordance with plans laid long beforehand. General Bertrand, the friend of a lifetime, made the supreme sacrifice of accompanying Robeant to the island so as to blind the English to the trick being played on them. For seven years, according to Omessa, the real Napoleon lived in Verona, selling spectacles to British travelers. At last the desire again to see his only son, whom he adored (or was it some new political plans in that restless brain?), got the better of his caution. The ex-emperor, the former conqueror of Europe, the hero of the finest army the world has ever seen, went to Vienna, where his little son was in the care of Francis II., Austrian emperor, who had thought it an honor to call Napoleon son-in-law and was shot down like a dog while trying to climb the wall which divided him from his son.

Omessa, whose declarations have created a tremendous sensation thoughout Europe, backs his statement with various documents.—Paris Cor. New York World.

QUEEN MARY STOOD.

A Royal Rebuke to the Ladies Who Insisted on Smoking.

Queen Mary does not like ladies smoking in her presence, and it is never done by any ladies in the entourage of royalty, though there are, as a matter of fact, two ladies attached to the court who indulge in an occasional cigarette, but they never do so in the presence of her majesty. Some few years ago the queen showed her dislike to the cigarette habit being indulged in by ladies in a manner that was not without its humorous aspect. Her majesty, then Princess of Wales, was the dinner guest of a well known American hostess, who, after dinner sought and of course obtained the royal assent to some of the ladies smoking cigarettes, the queen's dislike to this practice not then being generally known, but during the consumption of the cigarettes the queen remained standing, and of course every other lady in the room had to do like wise.

The hostess had the shrewdness to guess why her royal guest did not sit down and in a few minutes managed to convey her wish to the ladies who were smoking that they should throw away their cigarettes, which they gladly did, for they also suspected why they were kept standing. The queen then sat down, and her majesty has never since had reason to express her dislike of ladies smoking in her presence.—London M. A. P.

The Air Man's Heart.

M. Dastre, one of the professors in the Faculty of Sciences, in Paris, recently read a paper before the academy, the subject dealt with being "Mal des Aviateurs." The trouble of aviators is said to be very like mountain sickness, only it comes on much more rapidly. The sensation is experienced at a height of about 4,000 feet and again in the descent. One thing M. Dastre endeavored to impress upon his hearers was that a sound heart was before all things necessary for those ascending to great heights. Another point of advice was that any one who had experienced ill effects from an ascent should not allow the matter to rest when the sensations had passed away. He should make a point of consulting his doctor at the earliest opportunity.—London Globe.

When New York Sleeps.

In a recent number of the Vienna News Freie Presse Stefan Zweig gives his impression of New York after a "sojourn of a few days." He comments on the vastness of the city, its tumult and hurry, amid which he has discovered the "irresistible storm creating rhythm of the American metropolis. The night life under the glare of the brilliant illumination has its fascination as much as the day scenes, but when it is all over and the streets have become empty and only the roof signs remain to attract attention then New York is ugly. There is nothing more ugly," he adds, "than New York asleep—New York without people."

Catching rats with oyster shells is the unique method employed by some pearlers roundabout Broome, West Australia. They leave a large oyster on the floor of the cabin at night. It opens for a breath of fresh air, and the smell of fresh meat attracts the rats. When the rodent thinks he'll try a little supper, the oyster suddenly decides that he doesn't like fresh air. Next morning the shell is fried open and the dead rat thrown overboard.

The Great Staten Island Conspiracy—

An Episode in the career of W.W. Applegate, once Chief of the New England District of the United States Secret Service

COPYRIGHT 1911 BY W.G. CHAPMAN

JUST BEFORE THE DETECTIVE OVERTOOK THE COUNTERFEITER, HE TOSSED $6000 WORTH OF BOGUS STAMPS INTO A STREET CAR WINDOW

(This is one of a new series of stories concerning adventures that have occurred in the lives of the world's greatest detectives. Mr. Barton has gathered his material from real life, but in some cases imaginary names have been substituted for real ones, simply as a matter of justice to the innocent descendants of culprits mentioned in the narratives. Permissible liberties have been taken in the construction and arrangement of these fact stories, but in all that is essential they may be regarded as human documents of unusual interest and value. —Editor.)

Next to the duty on imports, the internal revenue tax on spirits and tobacco do more to maintain the government of the United States than the revenue obtained from any other source. Consequently, some of the biggest frauds that have ever been attempted in this country have been embodied in schemes to avoid or evade that particular payment. In recent years few plots of that kind have troubled the national authorities, but during the period immediately after the Civil war audacious counterfeiters not only imitated the money of the nation but also brought forth bogus internal revenue stamps such as are pasted around cigar boxes.

One of the boldest of these schemes was detected during the time that Colonel Whitley was head of the United States secret service. The counterfeit stamps were first discovered in New York, and later on similar bogus slips made their appearance in eastern Maryland and in certain parts of the west. Colonel Whitley was very anxious to break up the whole fraudulent business. He did not believe in spasmodic arrests and the imprisonment of minor offenders. He desired to detect and arrest the principals. With this end in view, he sent for Mr. W. W. Applegate, one of the shrewdest and most reliable men in the service. He told him just what he wanted and said that he would be given all the assistance that was required to make a successful fight against the counterfeiters.

At that time Mr. Applegate was the chief operative of the Secret Service division and had charge of the New England district, with headquarters in Boston. One who knew him well has said that he possessed "good judgment and tact, and that he was clear-minded as well as right-minded." Colonel Whitley, who was a good judge of men, frequently said that Mr. Applegate possessed in a marked degree the requisite qualities for a detective in the Secret Service. At any rate, his persistency and his steadiness of purpose, his zeal and his integrity, had been proven, and he was regarded as the man who was especially fitted to go after the internal revenue counterfeiters.

After he had fully digested all of the facts that were in the possession of his chief, Mr. Applegate journeyed to New York, where he believed the conspiracy had its head and front. For the purpose of his business he disguised himself as a merchant—a Mr. Oldbach, a western manufacturer of cigars who was visiting in the metropolis for the purpose of improving his trade. He stopped at a second-class hotel, and after a few days of parleying managed to get into the confidence of John Breme, a German, who was known to have once been a counterfeiter.

A few evenings together, a few visits to the theater, and a general exchange of good fellowship, and Breme was ready to do his part in solving the big fraud against the government. He introduced the detective to one James Walker, who, after a great deal of talk, mysteriously permitted him to have a peep at the new counterfeit tobacco stamp. It was so perfect that it would have taken the skill of an expert to tell it from the genuine article. Walker said that if Mr. Oldbach was discreet, he might be able to buy quantities of the stamps at a very low price. The bogus merchant said he would take the bogus stamp proposition into consideration. He immediately reported to Colonel Whitley at Washington and asked for further instructions. They came quickly by wire. He was instructed to agree to the purchase of a quantity of the stamps, but was told to have witnesses present so that arrests could be made.

Walker arranged to meet his supposed customer at one of the typical French cafes on the west side of one of the uptown streets just off Broadway. Walker and two of his pals were there. Mr. Oldbach came along, much to the gratification of the counterfeiters. The waiter, a very French-looking person, with waxed mustache, ushered them into the private dining room with much bowing and scraping and shrugging of shoulders. A bright-looking fellow took their hats and coats, and after they had been comfortably seated about a round table, an intelligent waiter, who wore an imperial that made him look like Napoleon III, came and took their order.

The food was good and the service was betetr, and all of the diners united in saying that it had been one of the best table d'hote dinners they had ever enjoyed. They had passed the soup and roast and salad and were engaged on the dessert before the subject of their meeting was even suggested. It was Oldbach then who started the conversational ball in motion.

"Well, gentlemen," he said, "I suppose we will have to get down to business."

"Very well," responded Walker; "I've had a talk with my friends and they say that if you will take the stamps in wholesale quantities you can have them at twenty-five cents on the dollar of the amount they represent."

"That seems quite reasonable," replied the detective. "Have you got any of the stamps with you?"

"Yes," was the response, "here is a package of them," and suiting the action to the word, he handed a big bundle to the supposed merchant.

Mr. Oldbach opened the package, examined it very carefully, wrapped it up again and put it in his pocket.

Walker laughed.

"I think you have forgotten something," he said.

"What is it?" was the reply.

"You haven't paid us," said Walker.

"Oh, indeed, that was an oversight. Well, perhaps I ought to tell you now that I do not intend to pay you."

"What?" cried the crook, and in his astonishment he arose from his seat and stood with his hand on the back of his chair.

THEY UNEARTHED THE MISSING PLATES AND DIES.

"I think I have spoken distinctly."

"Why, what do you mean?"

Oldbach arose now and said quietly. "I mean that all three of you are my prisoners!"

The three counterfeiters looked around the room. The waiter stood at a respectful distance, pulling away industriously at his waxed mustache; the coat room boy was gazing out of the window, taking in the sights of Broadway, while the chief waiter or door tender seemed to be asleep on the chair near the entrance.

It was Walker who spoke.

"Oldbach, you're a fool."

The disguised man laughed.

"No, I am not. I am a representative of the United States Secret Service," and he pulled aside the lapel of his coat and showed the chief crook the silver badge that was fastened to his waistcoat.

All three of the counterfeiters were now standing up, and they looked, in the words of the poet, fit for "treason, stratagem and spoils." Walker threw out his arm in a gesture of impatience.

"We're three to one. We're desperate men, too, and if you try any funny business we will kill you on the spot! Do you understand?"

The detective did.

He raised his napkin in the air as though to wipe his mouth, but he changed his mind at the last moment and waved the piece of white linen in the air.

It was a signal.

Instantly the waiter with waxed mustache, the indolent coat room boy and the sleepy door tender made a dash for the table. Before any one of them could say "Jack Robinson" the three counterfeiters were seized from the rear and a pair of handcuffs slipped on each pair of wrists.

It was one of the cleanest bits of work ever performed by the United States Secret Service, and Applegate complimented his three assistants on the clever and perfect way in which they had carried out their respective parts.

Bogus stamps to the value of $4,000 were found in the possession of Walker. He was arrested and imprisoned. In an effort to save himself, Walker "squealed" on Volney Wright, a young man who lived by his wits and who had been foolish enough to become mixed up in the great counterfeit plot. Wright, in turn, "squealed" on Phil Hardgrave, who was in the disreputable business, and, at the instance of Detective Applegate, agreed to meet Hardgrave and purchase counterfeit stamps from him.

The corner of Amity and Mercer streets was fixed as the place of the rendezvous. The hour was seven o'clock in the evening, just about dusk, when that section of the city was likely to be deserted. The detective prepared for the meeting with great care. Chief Whitley, Operative Applegate and six other men were scattered about the neighborhood. Hardgrave appeared at the time appointed but he noticed some of the men lurking in the shadows and he took alarm and ran away. Chief Whitley pursued him for several blocks, but just before he overtook him Hardgrave very cleverly tossed $6,000 worth of bogus stamps into the window of a passing street car. A struggle took place between the two men, and after the counterfeiter had been overcome the street car was out of sight. No bogus stamps were found in possession of Hardgrave, and under the law the chief was compelled to release him.

Colonel Whitley and Operative Applegate were persistent. They knew that the tobacco stamp counterfeiting scheme snake had been merely scotched and not killed. They were determined to carry the matter to a conclusion. Hardgrave was shadowed for three months. Finally, one day he was followed to a room on the upper story in a house on Nassau street. He escaped, but Applegate got Hart L. Pierce, an engraver, who lived and did business in the building. Pierce was terrified when he was accused of being an accomplice of the counterfeiters. A search of his place revealed a number of plates and various other paraphernalia used in the manufacture of bogus money and stamps.

He finally admitted that he had made the plate from which the counterfeit tobacco stamps had been printed. In short, he made a full confession of the whole business. He added, however, that the printing of the tobacco stamps had ceased, but the schemers had developed a new line of business. He said that they were now located at a house on Staten Island, where they were busily engaged in turning out millions of bogus internal revenue match stamps. These operations, he said, were being carried on under the direction of a well-known character by the name of Colonel Robert Clark.

For the next two or three days the employees and operatives of the Secret Service were as busy as bees. They first visited the room of Colonel Clark on East Thirteenth street. A careful search revealed upwards of fifty thousand bogus stamps of all kinds and for all purposes. Some were for cigar boxes; others were match stamps, and others still were for war stamps used on bank checks. Even Col. Whitley was amazed at the small denominations of some of the stamps. He knew that counterfeiters had manufactured bogus five-cent pieces, but he was surprised to discover that counterfeiters could make money in forging penny stamps.

All of the stuff found in Colonel Clark's room was confiscated. The colonel himself was arrested, but the news of his incarceration was jealously kept from public knowledge. Chief Whitley and Mr. Applegate were not ready for publicity.

On the following morning the chief, Operative Applegate and six of the best men in the service journeyed to Staten Island. They found the place without any difficulty and made a number of arrests. Some sort of alarm must have been given, however, because the plates and dies were not in evidence. Mr. Applegate walked about the grounds surrounding the building and presently came upon a spot where the earth had been freshly disturbed. He called for picks and shovels.

"What are you going to do?" asked Colonel Whitley, amused. "Dig a grave?"

"Yes," was the significant response. "I think I am going to dig the grave of this business."

The men worked with a will and they had not gone more than three or four feet in the ground when they struck a hard substance. It proved to be the missing plates and dies. They were all dug up and subsequently destroyed.

About twelve men altogether were arrested in connection with this gigantic scheme to defraud the government.

Colonel Clark, who had permitted himself to become involved in the disreputable work, had served in the Civil war with great distinction. He was colonel of the Thirteenth New York regiment of volunteers, and had a creditable record for bravery in battle.

As an incident of the big raid, a large match factory and all of its contents were confiscated by the government.

An Attentive Class.

The College of France, founded in Paris by Francis I., offers at the present day not only strictly academic instruction, but opportunities for the higher education in general. The following anecdote, from The Colour of Paris, shows how far the college carries its scrupulousness. Every scientific subject, even the most abstruse, will continue to be taught there as long as one solitary individual in all Europe desires to pursue it.

Certain courses are followed by two or three persons only. They tell the story of a professor of mathematics. This professor, who was extremely absent-minded, had lectured for a whole year to only one pupil.

He was perfectly satisfied that it should be so, but it occurred to him one day that he ought to congratulate his rare disciple, and he accordingly did so.

"Monsieur does not recognize me," replied the pupil. "I am monsieur's poacher, and I always get home at till monsieur has finished his lecture." —Youth's Companion.

Verb, Intransitive—"To Giddap."

The services of the farmers to the nation are not confined to one "field." Not infrequently they are pioneers in the development of the language as well as of the land, although it is not often that one is discovered blazing for himself so delightful a "trail to expression" as this, heard by a writer in the New York Times:

Not long ago I was driving through the remote country, and as usual, what the driver could best talk about was his horses—and he was talking.

"'Giddap,' I says to um, "giddap,'" he said, in telling me a story about a case of stalling in that same mud road we were then laboring through.

"And what did they do?" I asked, just to be saying something to show interest.

"Oh, they goddap, all right, they was good hosses," he responded.

Poor Recommendation.

A young Scotchman living in London married a beautiful and talented Englishwoman, of whom he was justly proud. Not long after his marriage he went to Scotland on a flying trip to see an old bachelor uncle.

"Weel, Tammas, ye have gotten a wife," said the old gentleman, "now what can she do, lad?"

"Do!" echoed "Tammas."

"Yes, do," repeated his uncle, firmly. "Can she sew on your buttons an' mak your porritch an' your scones?"

"Oh, no, she doesn't know how to do those things," said Tammas. "But she has the loveliest voice that ever you heard. She's a grand singer."

"Hoot, man!" cried his uncle, indignantly. "Could you nae get a canary in Lunnon?"—Youth's Companion.

False Teeth for Horses.

Dentistry for animals is now being practiced extensively. The latest story of successful treatment comes from Youngstown, Ohio, where a horse owned by Silas Simpson now rejoices in the possession of a full set of teeth. The animal has been in the Simpson family for years, and when its teeth became bad a veterinarian recommended having them taken out. This was done, and a set of artificial teeth made. They are removed and cleaned once a week. The horse eats its oats and food with the utmost ease, and willingly shows the false grinders to strangers.

He Calmed Her Fussiness.

A somewhat fussy elderly lady had asked the conductor for a transfer. "You'll be sure to tell me when we come to my transfer station, won't you, conductor?" she asked sweetly.

"Yes'm," said the conductor wearily.

The next time he passed through the car the elderly lady, remembering the ways of conductors, said to him again:

"You won't let me go past the station for station, will you, conductor? You'll be sure to tell me when I get there, won't you?"

The conductor sighed and looked at her gently and sadly. "I won't have to tell you, lady," he said. "I won't have to tell you, 'cause you'll ask me every time we come to a transfer station if that's where you get off."—Exchange.

Easy Money.

Veering trotted blithely to business. He had risen before daylight and worked two hours at clearing up the yard about his house. The thought of the pleasant surprise awaiting his wife brought forth a chuckle.

At luncheon Mrs. Veering remarked: "That man did his work remarkably well."

"W-what man?" gasped Veering.

"The man you engaged to clear away the rubbish in the yard. He was just finishing when I came down this morning and gave him a dollar."—Metropolitan.

Enormous Cigarette Consumption.

South Africa smokes 650,000,000 cigarettes per annum, and well over 600,000,000 of them are retailed in six-cent packets. Evidence to this somewhat startling effect was given recently by witnesses possessing special knowledge before the industries commission at Cape Town. The effect of this enormous consumption of tobacco upon the physical health of the population, must be considerable, and the Union government is being earnestly urged to take the question up. The Boy Scout movement is being greatly encouraged as it is expected that it will counteract and decrease the spread of the habit among the youthful inhabitants of the country.

Rather Rough on the Neighbors.

Many brain workers find at times a distinct need for some violent frolic or escape to relieve their pent-up feelings and overstrained nerves.

One such man has a preference for banging door; another for playing the "Dead March in Saul" with one finger; a third, after a heavy day's work, will go round the neighborhood ringing door bells; whilst a fourth, to steady his nerves, will dash a teacup against a wall.

It seems an idiotic thing to slap a cabman's face to relieve one's feelings, yet this is what a well-known actor does; and he does it in such a gentlemanly fashion, and pays so liberally, that the driver seldom takes offense.

Course of True Love.

"So your engagement with that American girl is broken off?"

"I fear it is," replied Baron Fresch.

"Didn't your family approve?"

"Yes. But my creditors utterly failed to make themselves agreeable to her."

Love never clogs a man's memory. He is scarcely off with the old until he is on with the new.

To Fight the Fly.

So completely have houseflies been exterminated in England that screens are no longer used in windows and doors. This shows what can be done. A solution of formalin or formaldehyde in water is the best and cheapest exterminator. Put a spoonful of formalin in half a teacupful of water and expose it in a saucer in your room. Try it once and you will see. Burn pyrethrum powder in the rooms and sweep out the stupefied flies or put twenty drops of carbolic acid on a hot shovel. The vapor is deadly to the pest. Put a dram of bichromate of potash in half a glass of water and sweeten. Expose a little of the solution in saucers. Sticky fly paper also will do the work.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

ESKIMOS SEEK HIGHEST PRICES

The Northern Huskies are No Longer Giving Things Away, and Demand Top Money

A lady tourist who was making a collection of native curios at Fort McPherson, the most northerly fur-trading post in Canada, had provided herself before leaving civilization with a small outfit of beads, needles, etc., in the hope of bartering them to good advantage with the aboriginals. Seeing some ivory carvings in a "husky" tent this lady intimated that she wished to acquire them, and offered in exchange first a few packages of needles, and then some beads, both of which were inspected and decorously handed back to her with a shake of the head.

After some talking the Esquimaux said her would sell for a pipe and some tobacco. This looked easy, as the curios were cheap at $6 to $7, and the lady went to the Hudson Bay Company's store and bought $1 worth of tobacco and a 50 cent pipe. These were handed to the "husky," who courteously looked them over, and then handing the pipe back remarked: "Tobacco good, pipe no good." The upshot was that the lady had to invest $5 in a pipe to obtain the coveted curios.

The most sought for articles of Esquimaux manufacture is the ivory cribbage board made out of a walrus tusk. These make both useful articles and handsome ornaments. The sides and ends are usually covered with carvings of wild animals, such as walruses, whales, foxes, wolves, etc., and, the work is in many cases extremely well executed.

A few years ago these cribbage boards could be bought for a comparatively trivial sum, but now, owing to a number of tourists having paid an absurd figure for them, the price has mounted to an almost prohibitive figure, from $50 to $100 being asked for almost any specimen, while for an unusually well-carved board an Esquimaux will not accept less than $125.

Other sought-after articles produced by the "huskies" are head and shell earrings, soapstone candlesticks, sealing spears, ivory fishhooks and sinkers, and patchwork mats manufactured from a mixture of splices of wild goat, seal and dearskins sewn together in a regular and not unbeautiful pattern.

The trade with the Eskimo is conducted on somewhat different lines to that with the Indians. For a number of years past whaling schooners sailing from San Francisco have made their winter quarters at Herschel Island, so as to be ready to commence hunting those valuable mammals as soon as open water appears. Their crews have dealt largely with the Esquimos in furs and curios, paying small prices and turning a selling trade in flour, bacon, tea, etc., for considerably less than the mere cost of transporting such articles into the country by the McKenzie River route. However, the schooner owners, finding that but little of the profit accruing from the transaction found its way into their pockets, have largely put a stop to the carrying of goods for trading purposes.

As a result a considerable number of the Eskimo, who each year first open water from Herschel Island, and the country east of the McKenzie River delta to the trading posts on the lower river. On arrival they barter their furs for whatever pleases them, and then something special—a sewing machine, steam tug, or what not—catches a native's eye, and he at once wishes to purchase it. If it is not for sale he at once orders one like it to be brought in next year. This the trader interested agrees to accomplish, and the question of price then comes up. Now the price is not put to the native in dollars, as that would not involve a sufficiently remunerative transaction. Instead the trader says—in taking an order for a phonograph, for instance, "You must bring me five lynx skins, twenty white foxes, and two mink. "Very good," replies the husky, and the deal is closed. He arrives at the post the following summer with the pelts called for, and he is an angry man if the phonograph has not been turned up.

A short time ago an Eskimo purchased a steam tug, which he is now an adept in operating, and was charged therefor 100 white foxes, two No. 1 silver foxes, thirty lynx and fifty mink. As the vessel cost but $1,200 at the point where sold, the transaction was by no means unprofitable.

SICK HEADACHES AND NERVOUSNESS

"Fruit-a-tives" Completely Cured Me.

LAKELET, Ont., May 12th, 1910.

"It is my firm belief that every woman should take "Fruit-a-tives" if she wants to keep herself in good health.

Before taking "Fruit-a-tives", I was constantly troubled with what is commonly known as "Nerves" or severe Nervousness. This extreme Nervousness brought on the most violent attacks of Sick Headache, for which I was constantly taking Doctor's medicine.

Constipation was also a source of great trouble for which the Doctors said "I would have to take medicine all my life" but "Fruit-a-tives" has banished these troubles and I am a well woman.

When I started taking "Fruit-a-tives", I took four at a time, but have reduced the dose so that it is only necessary for me to take one in a week, and that one "Fruit-a-tives" tablet every week keeps me well". MRS. FRED GADKE.

It is wonderful how quickly women find better when taking "Fruit-a-tives". These famous fruit tablets relieve headaches and tone up the whole nervous system. They regulate the bowels, strengthen the stomach, stimulate the appetite, and take away that pain in the back. Pale, weak, nervous women should always use "Fruit-a-tives".

POPULATION OF UNITED STATES

An Increase of 21 Per Cent. in the Last Ten Years

The population of the United States last year, according to the census, was 91,972,266. The following table shows the growth of the neighboring Republic during recent years:—

Year	Population	Growth	Rate of Increase
1910	91,972,266	16,39	21.0 p. c.
1900	75,994,575	15.11	20.7 p. c.
1890	62,947,714	12.79	25.5 p. c.
1880	50,155,783	14.57	40.1 p. c.
1870	38,555,983	12.74	32.6 p. c.
1860	31,443,000	10.39	35.6 p. c.

*Rate of increase over prior decade.

Thus the increase of continental United States during fifty years is 192.5 per cent. It is evident that the most rapid growth in population was during the decade from 1850 to 1860, which shows an increase of 35.6 per cent.—Monetary Times.

"My oldest son, five years old, got very bad with cholera infantum; two days after my next son took it, and the third day my little girl also took it. I doctored with all kinds of things, but they kept on getting worse and the doctors could do them no good. I then started the Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry, and after two or three days could see a difference, so kept on with the treatment, but they were so bad it took about two weeks to complete the cure. Different people have asked me how I saved my children's lives that time, and I always say it was Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry. I am now never without it in the house."

SIX THOUSAND MILE TRIP IN MOTOR BOAT

Lieut. Graetz Will Visit Unknown Parts of Africa to Find the Mysterious Bangweolo Lake

Lieut. Graetz, a German officer, has undertaken a motor-boat trip of six thousand miles across the African Continent from the Indian to the Atlantic Ocean, by way of the Zambesi River, Bangweolo Lake, and the Congo, and is now on his way into the interior of the Dark Continent. The party includes a French cinematograph operator and a native cook. Their boat is plentifully stocked with provisions and drugs, and at certain places on the route food depots have been provided from which they will be able to replenish their stores.

Lieut. Graetz speaks of the reasons which have induced him to embark on this adventurous voyage. During his motor-car tour across Africa a few years ago he was detained for some time on the banks of the Zambesi while a float was built to carry his machine across the stream. Here he came into contact with the Awemba tribe of natives, who told him marvellous stories of the mysterious inland sea known as the Bangweolo Lake.

This sheet of water, except at the point where the Zambesi River leaves it, is surrounded with miles of reeds, and no white man has ever sailed its surface. On the island which stud the lake are to be found colossal elephants and tall giraffes, while in the waters sea serpents and other strange and terrible creatures are concealed.

From the surface of the lake itself, declare the natives, hot springs spout into the air, and pestilential winds, sweeping across the marshes, carry death and destruction to all living things.

Of the few natives who have ever ventured out upon the Bangweolo Lake in the small frail canoes, none have ever returned to tell the tale of their adventures.

Lieut. Graetz thinks that unknown species of animal and marine life may possibly exist in this hitherto unexplored region, and it is to test this supposition that he has started out in a thirty-foot boat fitted with a five horse-power petrol motor to cross the African Continent.

JACK JOHNSON AN ORATOR

World's Champion Will Appear on the Platform as a Lecturer

Jack Johnson, the American heavyweight champion, is proving himself a versatile harvester of English currency. He has not had a chance to show his prowess in the squared circle, so he evolved a new method of lightening British pockets. He has turned lecturer. His first lectures will be held in Edinburgh, Scotland. The subjects of his dissertations, it is perhaps needless to say, will be the art of self defence. Those who make light of the black champion's venture are apt to wind up by envying his coin collection, for he not only has an immense following among that class actively interested in fights, but will be helped by that peculiarity of British character that counts a black face one of nature's gems of humor.

WHERE GERMANY IS SLOW

Behind Every Other Nation in the Matter of Airships

Germany is notoriously behind her sister powers in the matter of aeronautics, and on the head of Kaiser Wilhelm, whose love of sabre and gun and aversion to spending money on "new-fangled" methods of warfare, is heaped the coals of the critics who decry the Fatherland's aero backwardness.

Germany now has but 100 army airmen, and even this small number has been got together only after the most strenuous efforts on the part of the Kaiser's military aides. In the matter of aeronautics Germany is behind almost every other country of the civilized world.

UPHELD "UNWRITTEN LAW"

Italian Jury Acquits Murderer Who Shot His Wife and Her Lover

The "unwritten law," enforced under unusually romantic circumstances, has resulted in the acquittal at Vicenza of Guiseppe Molini, who killed his wife and her lover when he surprised them in each others company. Molini had been warned by numerous anonymous letters to watch his wife and his friend, Cavilli, a lawyer. When he showed one of the letters to his wife she was able to convince him that they were unfounded. One evening Molini went to a masked ball, leaving his wife at home, as she complained of illness. Late in the evening a woman wearing a black mask approached him and asked whether he knew that his wife and Cavilli were then together. He refused to believe her, but she offered to take him and show him the guilty couple. Molini followed the mysterious woman, who led him to his own house, where he found his wife and Cavilli. Molini rushed upon the lovers and shot them both dead. The masked woman disappeared amid the confusion, and has never been seen since, nor has Molini guessed her identity. At the trial the jury found Molini was "unconscious of his action" at the moment of shooting, and acquitted him amid much applause from the spectators in court.

NOT "DU CALVET."

Montreal Paper Enters Protest Against Immortalising a Traitor.

One of the streets in Montreal having been named after Du Calvet, a prominent merchant in that part of the history of Canada that immediately followed the Cession, "Le Nationaliste" enters the following protest:

"Du Calvet was a French Huguenot, but an insincere one. Landing in Canada immediately after the Cession, he became the secretary of a high official in the Government. He soon took an interest in, and derived a fortune from, the lumber industry. Until 1770 he was much encouraged by the administration, but, about that date, the governor began to frown upon him for his venal disposition.

"He was an easy friend to the American Revolution, and induced many French-Canadians to join him in intrigues destined to avenge himself on the administration. He directed them into suspicious operations and disloyal manoeuvres, and assigned them the dangerous part of furnishing information to the Revolutionaries. Several accomplices of his are arrested redhanded in the act. They are thrown into prison, whereupon Du Calvet, affecting the most exalted patriotism, declares that he is cognizant neither of them nor of their treason. This dirty business goes on for some time. Finally Haldimand, a brusk soldier who goes as straight to his purpose as a bullet from a musket, angered by the hypocritical attitude of the subverser, seizes him and throws him into a hulk in the harbor of Quebec. There he spent two years meditating new intrigues and ripening his vengeance.

"When he left prison he crossed over to England, where he exposed his grievances in a manifesto which was characterized by a great apparent love for the French-Canadian cause. And, while some of his own victims were languishing in a dungeon he was claiming with vehemence all kinds of civil liberties for them, in the name of the French-Canadian people.

"What a lovely defender we had!

"If the names of our streets must recall to the passerby episodes of our history, that of Du Calvet must be eliminated, lest it reminds the Pilons, the Pierres and the Boyers that their ancestors were thrown into jail by the intrigues of this sorry individual. Let us hide that name, and let the one that bore it receive the deserved oblivion."

A Prophetic Jibe.

In a campaign for a Dominion election, which took place on November 7th, Hance J. Logan, who was then whip of the Dominion Government, caused a laugh at a meeting at Moncton, N.B., by a prophetic utterance about Sir Charles Tupper, who was then leader of the Opposition at Ottawa.

Sir Charles had outlined to the electors the great things that he and his party had done.

Replying to the speech of the "old war horse," Mr. Logan said: "Sir Charles claims to have been the founder of the National Policy, he claims to have built the C.P.R., and he claims to have done many more things for Canada. Let us admit that he founded the National Policy, that he built the C.P.R., and did all these other things. Let us go farther and says that he built the world in six days. But he will rest on the seventh."

The audience enjoyed the jibe, and at least the Liberals thought that it was all the better because after the election Sir Charles was still in the cold shades of opposition.—Canadian Courier.

Museum Gets Relics.

Dr. R. B. Orr, of the Provincial Museum, has just received a collection of Indian relics that have been collected from the sites of old Indian villages in the townships of York, Vaughan, and King. The collection consists of arrow and spear heads, some of them about five inches long, crockery, beads, skinning knives, axes, hammers, and a number of beautifully carved pipes. One pipe is especially well made, being of the John Bull type, and the engraving is almost perfect. The collection was gather by the late Jos. Smetser, of Laskay, and was presented to the Provincial Museum by his son Thomas.

Kingston's Population.

According to the returns of the Government census, just concluded, Kingston's population is about 19,000. The Village of Portsmouth, taking in the Penitentiary and Rockwood Asylum, has a population of about 1,900. The actual population of Portsmouth is placed at 674. The population of the penitentiary is 494, and Rockwood Asylum 812.

WHO IS A BRITON?

Anomalies That Exist in Home and Colonial Naturalization.

A queer inconsistency in the naturalization laws of Britain and her Dominions was again discussed at the recent Imperial Conference in London. A foreigner who comes to Canada may, after a residence of three years, take the oath of allegiance, and we call him a British subject. In other colonies and dominion there are varying rules as to length of residence required, none of them running up to five years. But in Great Britain a foreigner must live five years in the country before he can be naturalized.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier and other colonial Premiers pointed out the injustice of this inconsistency. "A British subject anywhere ought to be a British subject everywhere," urged Sir Wilfrid. Rt. Hon. Winston Churchill agreed that a person having been naturalised in any part of the Empire and having, in addition, resided therein for five years should be deemed a British subject in the Imperial sense, and this will probably be made law. This will relieve the situation considerably, but Britain will stick to her five-year qualifying period.

In dealing with this question in a recent issue of The Busy Man's Magazine, Mr. Roden Kingsmill says:

"No one of the thousands of Americans who have taken the Canadian naturalization oath is a British subject. Nor are the Germans, the Icelanders, the Galicians, or any other alien newcomers to Canadian soil. They think they are as fully British subjects as the native-born Canadian or Scotchman, or Irishman, or Englishman. They are not. All that Canada has given them is the right to vote in Canada, to serve on juries, or in the volunteers, to sit in the Canadian Parliament or the Provincial Legislatures, and to enter those professions which no outlander can join.

"Canada has not enfranchised these aliens under false pretences. Neither are the British Ministers of the Crown greatly to blame. When the question of Empire-wide naturalization first came up at the Colonial Conference, Mr. Joseph Chamberlain promised to do his best to secure a change in the Imperial regulations. Sir Thomas Shaughnessy, about the time Commoner's retirement. Alfred Lyttleton, his successor, evinced slight interest in the question. Then, four years ago, the Campbell-Bannerman Government came in, and at the Imperial Conference of 1909, the Canadian Prime Minister brought the question up again. Herbert Gladstone, the Home Secretary, promised to give the matter his attention. But a general election began to loom on the political horizon, and minor matters were disregarded.

Even a man like Sir Thomas Shaughnessy, though a naturalized Canadian citizen, has no rights as a British subject outside the Dominion, as matters stand.

An interesting point, however, in this connection has been brought up by Mr. J. Castell Hopkins. Mr. Hopkins was born in the United States during a brief residence there of his parents, who came from England. But he was always a British subject, and neither he nor his brother had to become naturalised when they came to Canada. If his father had exercised the rights of American citizenship, or if he himself had reached his majority in the United States and had done the same, the case would have been different.

Canada's Birthplace.

Perhaps when his Worship the Mayor of Toronto was selecting a hostelry in London for his coronation visit, he was governed by historical association. At all events, the Westminster Palace Hotel, where he is staying, was the birthplace of the Dominion of Canada. From its proximity to the Houses of Parliament, that hotel has been the scene of a number of notable political gatherings, but nothing more historic has taken place within its walls than the series of conferences forty-five years ago which culminated in the Act of Union, under which the scattered British North American colonies welded themselves into a powerful and progressive Dominion. A memorial tablet was the other day placed in the room where the delegates met deliberated, and created the first British federation beyond the seas.—Star Weekly.

Insane In Hospitals.

An increase of 70 in the total number of inmates in the several hospitals for the insane in Ontario is shown in the 43rd annual report of the Inspector of Prisons and Public Charities, just issued from the Provincial Secretary's office. The total number this year is 5,809, as against 5,451 last year, the proportions being 2,698 male and 2,921 female. The accommodation in the hospitals is overtaxed by 160, and there are 164 applications on file for admission. The total admissions during the year ending October 31, 1910, were 1,149, and those discharged numbered 558.

The revenue from all sources amounted to $311,168, $109,194 of this being from municipalities, $168,914 from paying patients, $10,575 from farm and miscellaneous sources, and $22,182 was received from paying patients in the hospitals for feeble-minded and epileptics. The secretary's department has acted as administrator of estates for nearly a thousand persons, the total capital represented being more than $150,000.

Twenty-eight insane patients and 29 criminals have been deported, while 21 remain as a public charge, awaiting deportation.

Curious Labrador.

Dr. W. T. Grenfell describes Labrador as a land still hardly known beyond its borders. The cold current that flows along its shores from the north dominates its climate, and notwithstanding that it is considerably farther south it receives less continuous sunshine than the Klondike, because its summer is shorter. The coldness of the soil and the dryness of the winds stunt many of its plants to such a degree that a larch growing at the southern end of Labrador which showed thirty-two annual growth rings was but three-eighths of an inch in diameter. Mineral deposits seem to be abundant, but prospectors have been able to stay but for short periods.

Solubility of Gold.

Gold is one of the group of metals soluble only in that mixture of nitric and hydrochloric acids known as aqua regia. It has been found, however, that the presence of certain organic compounds renders gold soluble in hydrochloric acid. Thus a mixture of this acid and chloroform is found to be a solvent. Ethyl, or ordinary alcohol, methyl alcohol, and amyl alcohol are among the other substances which give to hydrochloric acid the power of dissolving gold. The solution takes place slowly in the cold and more quickly on heating.

The Economical Swiss.

As a political institution the Swiss government is the most economical in Europe. The official salary of the president of the Swiss confederation is $3,600. The federal councilors, or members of the cabinet, and the heads of the different departments receive $3,000 a year during office. The state councilors of the cantons of Bale and Zurich are the best paid of their class, receiving $2,600 and $1,800 a year, respectively, while Lucerne and Schaffhausen come next, with $1,000 per annum.

COAST LINE HEROES.

Splendid Work Done by the Federal Life Saving Service.

The federal life saving service, which has entered upon its fortieth year, has written one of the most glorious chapters in American history, says the Brooklyn Standard Union. Not a month passes without an act of heroism by some one or some party of the force that patrols the coasts and the great lakes. It is one continuous story of hard and dangerous work, the dreariness of the detailed account being frequently broken by instances of rare courage and sacrifice.

But measured by a more exacting rule to determine its value the life saving service is found to have earned rich dividends for the public which supports it. In the forty years 22,000 distressed ships, carrying 147,000 persons, have been aided by the corps. The property risked on these occasions aggregate $235,000,000. In the four decades the probable total cost of the service has been less than $100,000,000, which makes it plain that the service has much more than paid its way.

What has been saved in property is nothing to be compared with the saving of human life. It is this that the government is primarily interested in, and it is in this particular, of course, that the richest returns have been made. If there were some process by which the value of a human life could be translated into dollars and cents it would be made evident that the service has saved the world billions of dollars during the past forty years. Every one at all acquainted with the record of United States life saving realizes that this small but immensely important branch of the government has had a distinguished career and merits generous treatment.

New Peer's Pictures.

When the Lord High Commissioner to the general assembly of the Church of Scotland, Lord Glenconner, took up his residence in Edinburgh recently, he was, according to an old custom, presented with the keys of the city, the ceremony being followed by a levee and an official dinner.

Lord Glenconner, who, as Sir Edward Tennant, was Liberal M.P. for Salisbury, inherited from his father a wonderful collection of pictures, mostly of the early English school. For these he built a gallery adjoining his house in Queen Anne's Gate, so that they might be accessible to the public on certain days of the week, a concession that is much appreciated. The Lord High Commissioner is the eldest brother of Mrs. Asquith. Lady Tennant is one of three pretty sisters, daughters of Mr. Percy Wyndham.

The Speaker.

"I am quite surprised, Mr. Mosher, at your wife's knowledge of Parliamentary law." "Shu! Great Cesar! Hasn't she been speaker of the house for the last fifteen years?"—Canadian Courier.

Paris ingenuity has placed pockets in what many would claim an impossible place. They are to decorate fall hats! This is an innovation that owes its origin to the Easter tight hobble skirt.

NEW DESTROYERS

The British Programme Authorizes the Construction of Twelve Destroyers

It is announced from the British Admiralty that orders have been placed for twelve torpedo-boat destroyers. The shipbuilding programme of the present year authorizes the construction of twenty destroyers, and it is understood that some of these will be of a new type with a speed of thirty-three knots an hour. In recent years vessels have been built for only twenty-seven to twenty-nine knots, but in view of the speed now being attained by foreign destroyers, it has been decided to construct swifter craft, for the British Navy, without discarding the present very heavy armament, which includes a couple of four-inch guns.

SEA SERPENT COMES ASHORE

Peculiar Find Off the Coast of Vancouver Island

The skeleton of a sea serpent recently washed ashore on Catala Island, off Vancouver Island coast, was brought to Seattle to be prepared for shipment to the Smithsonian Institute Museum. The denizen of the deep seas had been dead but a short time. If real live specimens of this species of semi-fish and semi-serpent are still inhabitants of the North Pacific, Herbert Webb and party from the Washington State University will attempt to find them.

Captain J. T. Walbran, of the United States revenue service, saw the strange creature through his glass and went ashore in a small boat. The skeleton is sixteen feet long and twelve inches in diameter. The eyes are still in their sockets and are as large as apples. The top of the head was still covered with coarse brown hair. The teeth, about an inch long, are like miniature saws, and are hinged where they attach to the jawbone, thus enabling them to work cross-wise after the manner of scissors. The skeleton is one of the most remarkable ever found on the Pacific coast, and is a specimen of a rare and strange sea monster. Chinamen at Seattle state that on the coast of South China smaller, but similar, fish are seen during the season when typhoons are prevalent.

ANCIENT BULLION

Portion of Soudan Treasure Trove for Ontario Museum

Charles T. Currelley, director of the new museum of Toronto University, has received word that a good sample of the treasure trove of royal bullion, brought to light recently by Professor Garstang, of Liverpool University, England, in the course of his excavations at the ancient City of Meroe, in the Soudan, Africa, which existed about the time of Christ, was on its way to the museum. The bullion belonged to the ancient kings. Mr. Currelley related the very interesting circumstances associated with this sensational find. "Shortly after the time of Christ," he said, "the Soudan had a sudden burst of energy and greatness that those who have followed the Mahdi and Khalifa in recent times can understand, at least, to some extent. The great centre of this period was the town of Meroe, in the Soudan. Here great monuments were built and work was done that is surprisingly skilful and beautiful, though, of course, it is impossible to say how much of it was actually done by the Ethiopians, or the Soudanese themselves, or how far it was the result of imported slave or free labor from Northern Africa, or, in fact, from anywhere on the Mediterranean. For some time Professor Garstang, of Liverpool, has been carrying on most successful excavations at Meroe, and last year the Royal Ontario Museum received, through the kindness of Mr. Robert Mond, of London, England, who is partially financing the expedition, some exquisite pieces of the ceramics of this period. This last winter Professor Garstang discovered the ancient treasure house of the Kings of Meroe, and there was still in the place a quantity of the royal bullion in gold nuggets, dust, etc., to the value of many thousands of dollars. It is probable that this new gift of a portion of bullion is also through the kindness of Mr. Mond.

"One is apt to speculate as to what happened to that ancient Minister of Finance and to the whole staff of clerical and manual helpers, or in any way why a large mass of such portable treasure should have been left for nearly 2,000 years. At any rate, we are very glad that a part of it will find a home in Toronto"

Mr. Currelley added that the records of ancient history threw very little light on the existence of the City of Meroe. There is a script at the ancient site of the once great city, and two men have been working on it, but so far have not been able to make head or tail out of it.

ECONOMY OF GOOD ROADS

The Cost of Haulage is Enormously Decreased

The value of good roads becomes evident when we look at the financial side of the problem. The cost of hauling one ton one mile is nine cents in Germany and twenty-five cents in the United States; the difference is largely one of road bed. If we apply these figures to hauling, say, 5,000 bushels of wheat five miles, the cost in Europe would be $67.50, in the United States $187.50, or $120 more. It will be safe to say that where 5,000 bushels of wheat is raised, as much more hauling will be done which would represent another $120, or $240, the extra outlay caused by poor roads. This is only one item. Good roads increase the value of the land—$5 an acre is putting it too low, but at that it amounts to $1,600 for a half section—then the convenience and the ability to market at any time, so that advantage can be taken of the highest prices. The man in town realizes the value of good roads, and he gets them. He paves the sidewalks and streets. He knows that they will increase his business, his comforts and social advantages, but no more so than in the country for the farmer.—North Dakota Agricultural College.

THE HIGHEST DIGNITY

There joined the police force of London a young Scotchman but recently arrived from his native land. Being detailed one day to block the traffic on a certain thoroughfare where members of royalty were expected to pass, he was accosted by a lady hurrying to keep an appointment who thrust her head from the carriage window to remonstrate with him over the delay. "I canna let you pass, ma'am," answered the man of the baton. "But, sir, do you know who I am. I am the wife of a Cabinet Minister." "It disna mak no difference, ma'am," he answered. "I couldn'a let you pass if you were the wife of a Presbyterian minister."—Presbyterian Standard.

The Seine fish have had an unexpected pleasure through the arrival in their midst of a wagonful of grubs which were upset on the Boulevard de Strasbourg, and, in order that trams and motor-cars should not be delayed, were turned into the river by the corps of street cleaners. Paris bachelors are in for a hard time if the majority of the town councillors have their way. At its last sitting a proposition was discussed for imposing a tax on all unmarried men, and the town councillors voted the following resolution by 27 votes to 6: "The town council resolves to exonerate large families and to seek new resources to make up a sum of 300,000 francs, the amount of the exoneration. It asks Parliament and the Government to create a new source of revenue by imposing a tax of 10 francs on all unmarried men, and a surtax of 5 per cent. on all house rents exceeding 250 francs."

PRISONER IS TO TELL THE COURT WHAT HE KNOWS CONCERNING HIS WIFE'S DEATH

Henry Clay Beattie Will Deny the Evidence Given by His Counsel of Purchasing the Shot Gun---Question of Veracity.

CHESTERFIELD COUNTY COURT HOUSE, VA., AUG. 30.—The commonwealth of Virginia concluded its case against Henry Clay Beattie, Jr., charged with the murder of his wife, Louise, at the first session of court to-day and rested at 12.12 o'clock. In concluding its case the state presented several witnesses to rebut the testimony of 16-year-old Alexander Robertson, on of its own witnesses, who testified yesterday that there was a blood spot on the Midlothian turnpike other than at the spot where the state claims Mrs. Beattie was killed.

These four adult witnesses flatly contradicted the story of the boy, which the defence claimed as a strong point to show that she was killed by Beattie's automobile and that her blood leaked from the car over the road at several spots. Their testimony dealt a sharp blow to the prosecution.

The strongest point brought out by the state during the entire presentation of the case, was the testimony of Paul Beattie, cousin of the defendant, that he purchased a shotgun for Henry Clay Beattie, Jr., before the murder was committed and that afterward the prisoner confessed to him that he had killed his wife.

The defendant will take the stand to deny this story on the decision of the jury as to whether his story or that of Paul Beattie, an epileptic, is to be believed.

The defence immediately entered upon its task of rebutting the testimony that had put the young defendant within the shadow of the death chair. Of the 30 witnesses originally summoned by the defence, about half had been excused and indications were that the case might reach the jury by the end of this week.

The case develops new and puzzling angles daily, though as it stands to-day it is practically a question of veracity between Henry and Paul Beattie. Aside from the statements of Paul, the evidence adduced is purely circumstantial. No attempt has been made to prove that Paul really bought the gun which he says he delivered to his cousin and with which he claims his cousin killed Mrs. Beattie. The hardware dealer from whom Paul claims he bought the three 12-gauge shells which went with the gun has taken the stand and substantiated that part of his testimony. The pawnbroker, Weinstein, from whom Paul claims he bought the gun, has not been called. This is one of the puzzling features of the case that newspapermen who are gathered here from all parts of the United States and most of whom have had long experience in murder trials, cannot comprehend.

The belief grows stronger every day that the defence has some startling surprises or else that it has no case at all.

A driving rain lashed the window of the cell through which Henry Beattie looked when he arose here this morning. His quarters had been changed from the steel cage on the second floor to a comparatively commodious room on the first floor, largely because of the stories published of the rats bothering him on the upper floor. He now occupies the room which was made ready for Beulah Binford.

The trial was held up for some time by the failure of Asst.-Prosecutor Wendenburg to reach court. His automobile became stalled in the sea of mud that the all-night rain had stretched from the court house to Centralia. While he was awaited, witnesses for the defence were called into the court room in batches of five each and sworn.

Despite all the evidence piled up against him, Beattie came into court with no trace of fear in his face or demeanor. In vivid contrast was the face of his father. It is deeply furrowed with care and his mild, blue eyes have in them the light of a great sorrow.

Trial Delayed by Witnesses.

Heavy rain clouds canopied the squat little old Court House and there seemed to be a prospect of another storm breaking over Chesterfield Court House. A day or two more of rain might mean delay in the trial, for the roads would become impassable.

The defense received a shock when a doctor's certificate stating that Mrs. M. C. Steger was physically unable to appear was presented. Attorney Smith, for the defence, said that her testimony was vital to the prisoner's case and that if she couldn't appear it would be necessary to take her deposition.

Miss Louise Reeves was then called by the state, but as she was not in attendance, Major James D. Patten, one of the State Penitentiary Board, was recalled.

Major Patten was absent also, and John Alohn was called. He, also, failed to answer to the summons. Reports that reached the court room stated that vehicles of every description were stalled in the mud between here and Centralia. County Officer George Jarrell was next called.

Attorney Smith then asked if Paul Beattie was present, declaring that the defence proposed to recall him. He had not been brought out from Richmond but the state announced its willingness to produce him.

A number of the witnesses were excused by counsel for the defence, among them being a physician. It became evident that the defence was going to put what strength it has in attacking Paul Beattie's testimony that he had bought the shot gun for Henry and that Henry afterwards confessed the murder to him.

Finally, Miss Reeves, a prepossessing girl of about 23 years of age, appeared and testified that she was maid of honor at the wedding of Mrs. Louise Owen Beattie. The hairpin which Alexander Robertson yesterday testified he found in the road near the scene of the murder was shown to the witnessed, who testified that it was of a kind such as Mrs. Beattie generally wore. On cross-examination Mr. Smith brought out that hundreds of thousands of such pins were made. Miss Reeves was excused and Officer Jarrell then took the stand.

Testify to Blood Spots.

Jarrell was called to rebut the evidence of the Robertson boy yesterday as to the blood spots seen by him in the road following the murder.

"Did you look for any blood in the road after the crime, and when?" he was asked.

"Yes, on both Tuesday and Wednesday," he replied.

"Was there any reason for looking for other blood spots?"

The defence excepted to this and the Court sustained it.

"There was no other blood spot on the road between Mr. Owen's house and the scene of the crime," declared the witness when the question had been put to him in proper form.

Beattie again betrayed lively interest throughout this line of testimony and prompted his counsel almost continuously.

Witness was asked if his activity in trying to find further blood spots in the road was not inspired by a diagram in a Richmond paper showing these alleged spots.

"Yes, sir; I think some such thing was published," he said.

Detective Luther L. Scherer was recalled and testified to his hunt for blood spots near the scene of the murder. He was confident that there was only one blood spot.

"I had heard there was some other blood," he said, "but did not believe it. I looked especially between telephone post 100 and the belt line. Close to the pole Mr. Robertson, brother of the boy who testified yesterday, and I looked carefully where he said the blood spot was and could find no evidence of it."

He remained firm in his recital on cross-examination.

Major J. D. Pattens' testimony corroborated that given by Detective Scherer.

Benjamin Owen, Secretary to Governor Mann, of Virginia, and an uncle of the slain woman, gave similar testimony.

Questioned, About Gun.

"Did you stop on the night of July 15, when you stated that you went with Henry in his automobile to get the gun, to fix the light on the car?" was the first question asked Paul Beattie.

"Yes, sir," he replied.

"Did you tell the pawn broker from whom you bought the gun that you wanted it as a watchman?"

"Yes, sir."

"Did you have a shot gun as a watchman or did you have one in the cement house of Mayos Bridge?"

"No, sir."

G. W. Booth was then called, Paul Beattie remaining in the chair.

"Did you have a conversation with this gentleman, Mr. Booth, on the day following the homicide, saying you did not believe Henry had ever committed the crime, that he always spoke highly of his wife?"

"I remember seeing him, but I did not say anything to him about Henry or his wife," Mr. Booth said.

Paul was then excused and Booth was called to the stand.

He testified that he knew Paul Beattie and said that he had talked with him on the Wednesday immediately following the murder.

"Paul then said to me, 'What do you think of Henry? I don't think Henry killed his wife, as he always spoke well of her to me.

On cross-examination, witness admitted that he was an intimate friend of the prisoner. He was excused.

On re-direct testimony, it was brought out that the witness' only relations with the prisoner were of purely a business character.

A few witnesses for the defence were called into the court room and sworn after which an hour's recess was taken.

One of the Jurors Fixed

During the lunch on recess rumor went around the court that one of the jurors had been fixed for the defence. Harry M. Smith, of the defense, was asked about it and he replied: "It is an absolute damnable lie. No man on this jury has been seen or questioned by either prosecution or defense outside of the court room and none would be."

Peterboro, Ont. Aug. 30, 11

To Mrs. Jno. Daynard and family:

We, the members of Court Stanley, No. 7680, A.O.F., wish to convey to you our sincere sympathy in the loss you have sustained by the death of your beloved husband and our brother.

We would willingly bear a part of your burden and share the grief which now fills your home with sorrow. We pray that the wise God Who doth all things well will lessen your sorrow by filling your heart with a strong desire for a glorious reunion where parting shall be known no more.

We realise how vain our words to bring comfort are, but we trust you will seek consolation from Him who alone can give. While we know death is the lot of all, and sooner or later those who are dear to us will be taken away from us, yet we feel the blow heavily when it comes.

In conclusion we commend you to the word of His grace who has called your beloved husband from scenes of labour to those of abiding rest, praying that His ever loving Providence may watch over you and your family through blessings of many years, till in the sweet by and by we shall meet to part no more.

ECZEMA IS CAUSED BY IMPURE BLOOD

Cured by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills Because They Make Pure Blood

Ask any doctor and he will tell you that eczema is caused by impurities in the blood—that salves and outward applications are worthless and a waste of money. The reason why Dr. Williams' Pink Pills have always been so successful in curing this most annoying trouble is because they act directly on the blood, reaching the root of the trouble and driving out all impurities. They banish eczema, salt rheum, unsightly pimples and eruptions, relieve the irritation and itching and give perfect health. Mrs. A. Puling, of Milestone, Sask., says: "I was afflicted with a blood and skin disease which the doctor called eczema, but which did not yield in the least to his treatment. I was covered with sores and in very bad shape. A friend advised me to take Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and after using eight or nine boxes I was completely cured. I can strongly recommend the Pills to anyone suffering from that trouble."

A medicine that can make new, red blood will cure not only skin troubles, but also anaemia, rheumatism, neuralgia, indigestion and a host of other troubles simply because these troubles are the result of bad blood. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills make new blood and under their use blood and nerve troubles disappear. Sold by all medicine dealers or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

An Error Is Corrected

The Examiner yesterday in its report of the tragic death of Mr. Frank Lefevre in the Canadian General Electric Company's yards stated that a G.T.R. engine was involved in the accident. Out of justice to the G.T.R. the Examiner wishes to say to-day that it was a C.P.R. crew that was operating the train in question.

THE BURDENS OF AGE

The kidneys seem to be about the first organs to wear out and fail to properly perform their work. The result is weak, aching back, rheumatic pains and failing eyesight. Many people of advanced years have recovered health and comfort by using Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills. They ensure the healthful action of liver, kidneys, and bowels.

MR. STRATTON'S SPLENDID MEETING AT ENNISMORE

Big Gathering Enthusiastically Endorse Logical Arguments in Favour of the Reciprocity Agreement---One Ennismore Farmer and His 270 Reasons for Supporting the Pact.

The thrifty, cosy community of Ennismore streamed into St. Martin's T. A.S. Hall last night and listened for the usual three hours, to reciprocity. Chairman Charles O'Connor stated that that was what they were all there for—to hear reciprocity threshed out.

He invited any opposition to take a seat on the platform, and it would be given a chance to speak. But nobody stepped forward.

The meeting was enlivened by music, a sextette of British born from Peterborough providing a couple of glees which made a great hit with the audience. These young men have not lost their sweet English voices in the nervous Canadian air.

Ennismore Barley Talks.

Although Mr. Stratton's voice was husky from his effort of the night before, his message was cheerful enough. He gave Ennismore a straight talk on the reciprocity schedules.

"Why," he said, when he came to barley, "it was an Ennismore farmer that told me he had two hundred and seventy reasons in his barn for voting for reciprocity."

"How's that," I asked.

"Well, I have nine hundred bushels of barley, and if reciprocity goes through and I get that thirty cents a bushel duty off it is just $270 more for me."

"You all know him," said Mr. Stratton. "I'd give you his name only that would be telling. I think the Ennismore farmers are pretty well agreed that reciprocity is not politics. It's business and all I want you to do is to vote where your interests dictate."

Where the Farmer Gets His.

Mr. Stratton pointed to the prosperous farms and big barns of Ennismore as an example of the general benefits accruing from the Fielding tariff.

"This reciprocity," said Mr. Stratton, "is the farmers bit of protection. It protects him by giving him another market and to that extent shielding him from the Canadian middleman and food monopolist. Another buyer in the field won't hurt the price you get for your products."

"Yes," said Mr. Stratton, "the wise farmer will look for all the markets he can get, for the time may come when the British market will not be able to absorb all our wheat, and the Northwest will be sending its surplus products, in cattle, horses and grain down to Ontario to compete here. We need that United States market to keep up with our producing capacity."

Mr. Stratton went through the free list item by item and quoted comparative prices in Buffalo and Toronto, a pocket logic that Ennismore readily apprehended.

A Faithful Steward.

Turning to his twenty-five years' faithful service to the country in the Ontario Legislature and the Dominion Parliament, Mr. Stratton mentioned the appropriations he had obtained for good roads, school funds, bridges, wharves, conservation dams and other public works for the benefit of the people.

"I can safely say, that in the last seven years, no man has saved more money for the county and got more from the Government of Canada for useful public West Peterborough purposes."

"They tell us," said Mr. Stratton, "to let well enough alone. The best way you can let well enough alone is to leave the present government in power and leave me as your representative."

Where the Workingman Gets His.

"The farmer," said Mr. Stratton, "will receive more for his products under reciprocity, while the consumer will at the same time pay less for them. That sounds like paradox, doesn't it. But it's simple as A.B.C. I say confidently that the working man is going to be able to buy more for his money. The cost of living is bound to be reduced."

"How do I explain it?" went on Mr. Stratton. "Well, in the first place the duties at present collected on imported products, which runs into millions of money, will not be collected, but will remain in the consumer's pocket. In the second place, the commission agents, middlemen, and food monopolists will no longer be able, on account of the American tariff, to fix the price at which the Canadian farmer must sell to them. What's more, the Canadian tariff being removed, they won't be able to control and keep up the price to the consumer. The advantage at the buying and selling ends, both of which the middleman used to take for himself, will now be equitably shared between the producer and the consumer."

Manufacturers Getting in Line.

"The reasonably minded manufacturers in Peterborough are not opposed to this agreement. How can they be opposed to anything that feeds the workingman better, cuts down the price of living, enables him to save money and makes him happier and more satisfied with his lot?"

"Far from shutting down factories or putting them on short time," said Mr. Stratton, "this agreement is going to make the wheels whirl faster. Better prices and larger markets will bring more money into the country to be spent on the articles that the factories turn out. More orders for the factories mean, of course, more work for the workingmen and more workingmen to do it. In a word, more work and better and steadier wages."

Nailing a Lie.

"Somebody said that the Quaker Oats would shut down if reciprocity went through. "I have in my pocket" here Mr. Stratton produced a letter, "the document that nails that lie. So far from shutting down or going out of business, Mr. Robert Stuart, the general manager of the company in Chicago, writes me in these words: "I am in favour of reciprocity so far as it affects the Quaker Oats Company, Peterborough." And it's the same way with the other manufacturers. The reciprocity schedules don't affect them one iota.

"Senator Cox is a man you all know. He has many financial interests, but he can see nothing in the reciprocity agreement that can do anything but benefit the general interests of the country. He would regard it as a great misfortune, he says, if the opinion were formed that the men concerned in the management of the financial institutions of Canada have not at heart the welfare of the classes engaged in manufacturing and trading."

"This agreement," Mr. Stratton continued, "is no injury to the manufacturers' protection. I myself am a modified protectionist. I believe that the prosperity of the country for a long time to come, is bound up with reasonable protection for our manufacturers. Like Senator Cox, I see only great good in a business way and no harm to Canadian nationality in this reciprocity agreement.

Everybody Wanted It.

"I don't want to confront everybody with what he said a year ago," said Mr. Stratton, "but I can't resist the temptation to mention a few names of gentlemen who are now shouting against reciprocity. It's a clear case of sour grapes, because they didn't get to it first.

Only a year ago last January, J. W. Edwards, M.P. for Frontenac, was saying in Hansard: "Will any man in this House affirm that it would not be better for Canada to be selling the United States $114,000,000 worth of our products than to be selling them only $86,000,000. Mr. Edwards wanted the trade balance to be on our side. Dr. Sproule was saying, as late as November, 1909: "It would be a great calamity if we could not export our live cattle." The home market was not enough for Dr. Sproule. T. E. Armstrong, M.P., Lambton, was saying a year ago last April: "Let the Liberals point to one market that they have opened up." Well, we're doing it now and Mr. Armstrong isn't satisfied.

"I won't quote the fellows in far off provinces. These are Ontario supporters of Mr. Borden with whose names you are familiar. What was our own Mr. Beresmith of East Peterborough saying in January 1910. Here are his words: "I remember from my brightest days hearing the Liberals, when in Opposition, talking about capturing the markets of the United States, and having reciprocity. The Liberals are in power. Have we reciprocity to-day?" No Mr. Beresmith. But we're doing our best. After September 21 you will, no doubt, get your year-old wish."

Some Questions and Answers.

"Why," asked Mr. Hall, "is there an election anyway? Because the Opposition in the House of Commons forced it on the country out of pure cussedness." Seeing that they were bent on running their heads against a stone wall, Sir Wilfrid gave them their wish on the principle that whom the gods would destroy they first make mad. And so sure was Sir Wilfrid of the merits of the business proposition he was submitting to the country, that he forewent the advantage that a redistribution would have given him—amounting perhaps to twenty-five new Liberal seats in the Northwest."

It was Mr. Hall's day for asking questions. Leading questions they were, as he, as a lawyer knows, but the evidence there brought out was strong. "Has the Conservative party in the House of Commons always been in such a precipitous hurry to appeal to the electorate?"

And again Mr. Hall answered his own question. "When they were giving away $70,000,000 in money and 60,000,000 million acres of land, and $35,000,000 of completed railway—a gift amounting to three times as much as the then annual revenue of the country—they didn't make any fuss about consulting the people or renewing their mandate. They did it by an act of Parliament, the way this strictly business question should have been settled too."

"But this agreement," went on Mr. Hall, "which is not for the benefit of a great corporation, but for the benefit of the farmer and the workingman and the oppressed person, known as the average consumer, is delayed and held up and talked out until finally patience is exhausted and the obstructors get their way."

"Yes," said Mr. Hall with heat, "this agreement that could have been

TWO CROPS.

No. 1 Northwest hard.
Gilt-edge malting barley.

Two crops that can not be grown anywhere in the world besides Canada.

Two crops that our Yankee friends are wild to get.

Two crops that Canada has on sale.

Two crops that the reciprocity agreement makes free.

Two crops that mean money in the farmer's pocket the banker's vault, the merchant's till and the workingman's pocket.

Two crops that make two strong arguments for the trade agreement.

THE REAL CULPRIT

The Toronto Globe puts a good one over on the Mail and Empire. The latter paper says now that Beattie Nesbitt, the former president and wrecker of the Farmers' Bank was the captain of a pirate craft in 1908. But in January 1908, when Beattie Nesbitt ran for mayor of Toronto, it said "Vote for Nesbitt. He is the man that Toronto needs at the head of its affairs in 1908. We need a man of Nesbitt's forceful personality, not only to push to realization the great undertakings that have been so long dreamt about, but also to protect the city from deals that are being promoted." Would not Beattie Nesbitt with his "forceful personality" and his "pirate craft" have had a bully time if the people of Toronto had taken the Mail's advice in 1908.—Ottawa Free Press.

LABOUR DAY.

Monday, Sept. 4th is Labour Day, set apart as a national holiday, when the whole working population goes on strike, as it were, for the day. The workingman who makes the world move, and keeps it alive, takes a rest. And he deserves a rest. It expresses a familiar truism to say that labour creates all wealth—converts the raw material of the soil, the sea ,the shop, into gold; labour, in a word, runs the mint in which all the wealth of the world is coined. Labour, which was the primal curse on our first parents has, by the beneficence of the great Master Workman, been converted into a blessing, and the instrument of working out His designs towards the children of men. He established the principle of Labour Day when "he rested from his work, blessed the seventh day and hallowed it.

While the workman appreciates Labour Day as a national recognition of his right to rest, he appreciates far more national recognition of his right to a chance to work. The national conditions that bring prosperity, that give the workingmen regular employment and good wages, meets his wishes better than anything else. Any government that so rules the country as to bring prosperity—to bring commercial and industrial activity—to bring busy days and abundant employment, is the true friend of the true working man.

The Examiner hopes for fine weather, and a happy holiday on Monday next.

THE REAL REASON.

The Review and Mr. Burnham are trying to dig Mr. Stratton into a discussion of the Farmers Bank matter, something that has nothing to do with the reciprocity issue. Last election it was the Home Life, now it is the Farmers Bank and one will fail as flat now as the other did in 1908.

If Mr. Stratton were vindictive, he would have the editor of the Review arrested for contempt of court—discussing, prejudging and dealing in a dirty way generally, with a matter that is sub-judice—still before the courts; but he is only the instrument; he is not the man behind the gun, the man who poses as a clean, white-washed purist, who would scorn, underhand methods and fight boldly and in the open.

Mr. Stratton is prepared to discuss every phase of his relation to the Farmers Bank matter before the public in the Opera House, with Mr. Burnham, if he can be induced to come here, the Police Magistrate of Toronto, or Crown Attorney Corley of Toronto, who played the political game of the political opponents of Mr. Stratton, in the hotbed of Toryism. He did this by dragging Mr. Stratton into the Farmers Bank affair on no other grounds than this — that he (Mr. Stratton(simply signed a cheque, issued by a company of which he was president—issued as a straight, fair matter of business. The crown attorney could see a crime in this, but he closed his eye when the man—Dr. Nesbitt the 'Tory' boss who wrecked the bank,—was allowed to escape, to flee, to hide from justice. And he is hiding yet, though he's a man of so marked a physique, that it would be as difficult to conceal his presence anywhere as to hide a whale in a wash tub. If Dr. Nesbitt was not a prominent Tory and didn't know so many dark party secrets, hands could and would be laid on him any day.

Mr. Burnham, is not so much concerned for the sufferers from the Farmers Bank failure, wrecked by the Tory boss of Tory Toronto, as he is to indulge in spite. His real animus his real solicitude for justice is expressed in his declaration to a citizen —"I don't care a —— whether I win or lose the election; but by —— I'll blacken Stratton, throughout the country."

TWO BRANDS OF LOYALTY.

This short but pregnant paragraph is from the Montreal Herald. No more concise, no stronger condemnation of the double game could be written:

We say it deliberately: our English-speaking Conservative friends are playing with fire when they lend countenance to the Nationalist leader and his followers. They, and Canada with them, will have to pay the losses if a conflagration results. They are helping to accentuate the difficulties of a national situation already difficult. They are strengthening forces that make for wider lines of cleavage between English and French. They are helping to undo the work of harmonizing the two races that has progressed so rapidly the past fifteen years. And they are, by their alliance with Bourassa, by the moral strength that such alliance imparts to his movement, undermining in the most positive and direct manner the chances of harmonious and united action by Canada in matters of Imperial concern.

There is abundant ground for asserting the existence and active operation of shameful and shameless alliance between the anti-British Bourassa in Quebec and the ultra-British Borden—in Ontario—for the promotion of their common cause — "anything to beat Laurier." This slogan implies that Mr. Borden's patriotism and loyalty to British connection—for campaign purposes—are only from the teeth outward . "Anything to beat Laurier" finds its logical variant in Mr. Borden's case, in, "anything to get office." Playing the placeman's game with patriotism ,is not worthy of Mr. Borden's record, nor of Mr. Borden's reputation for honest ambition. Mr. Borden had better nobly fail, than ignobly win. Yet we find the man who is exploited as the Chevalier Bayard of politics—integer vitae, scelerisque pris, the acclaimed, ad nauseaum, champion of British connection—we find him, placing the machinery of the Conservative organization at the disposal of empire-wreckers like Bourassa, and his political sans culiottes; we find him willing to climb to the Premier's seat over the trampled flag of the empire, over the chasm between the citizenship of Canada, dug by the propaganda of the anti-British Bourassa, that would wither like September grass if it were not for the shade and shelter and watering of the Conservative party, led by Mr. Borden.

We expect what we get from Mr. Bourassa; it is the product of the agitator's trade—we expect what we don't get from Mr. Borden, something better than playing fast and loose with British connection and risking the sacrifice of Canadian unity, by an alliance with the only ovet, open, declared movement in Canada to destroy imperial sentiment and with it British connection. Such a situation, put in the form of a charge, fits Mr. Borden more than the charge that Sir Wilfrid Laurier is conspiring to betray Imperial interests and British connection; for Sir Wilfrid tells the Bourassa political brigands to their teeth — the damnable thing in their eyes—that his political creed is "Canada and British annexation."

There is corroborative evidence that Mr. Borden is working hand in glove with Bourassa et al by placing Conservative funds at their disposal to circulate campaign literature of their school in the interests of—who but Mr. Borden? Certainly Conservative campaign funds would not be used to promote Sir Wilfrid's interests. This literature, reprinted from Le Devoir, Mr. Bourassa's paper, charges Sir Wilfrid Laurier with "intriguing with Chamberlain to carry on ambitious Imperial projects through "this infamous war.'

Let the 'British Born" of Arthur Hawkes and the Canadian British Born read the corroborative evidence in another column on this page and see if it consists with the loyalty of Mr. Borden and his party to impeach and impair the loyalty of the Liberals, who are called traitors for being true to the British ideal—free trade—in natural products only—with the United States.

JEKYLL AND HYDE.

"Two thirds of Laurier Cabinet are away behind the times, or they never would have jumped at reciprocity," says the Citizen, the leading Conservative journal of Ottawa. Of course that is the war editor talking. His military training has led him to "knock the block off" everything human that shows up above the horizon.

Now the peace editor has not been trained that way; he knows more about figures and practical business. Here is what he wrote in The Citizen on February 9 last:

"In other words the reciprocity agreement means in dollars and cents that CANADA IS GETTING THE LONG END OF A BARGAIN, which will prove to the advantage of both parties concerned, to the extent of the difference, between $4,849,933 and $2,363,763. Disregarding the advantages that must ensue for the consumer, the producer and the exporter, the agreement, is one that should appeal even to those who consider the financial aspect of such matters first, and the effect upon the general prosperity of the country only when such an argument serves to support the original premise."

This is only one of thousands of similar instances of Conservative journals, Conservative statesmen and Conservative members of parliament, turning a back somersault on the reciprocity agreement.

When the agreement was first announced by Mr. Fielding, it was hailed by both Conservative and Liberal, as a great thing for Canada—the Canadian negotiators had made a good bargain; for once Uncle Sam had come out without the big end of the bargain.

But the monopolistic interests in the big cities, took advantage of it; they seemed to fear that reciprocity would in some blind way interfere with the chance a high tariff gives them to perpetuate the combines that permit the payment of low prices to the producer and exact high prices from the consumer. The monopolistic and combined interests said in effect, "Here's a chance to beat the government, to beat Laurier. Oppose the agreement—we'll stand behind you and furnish the funds." And this is being done. Not only is the money of the Canadian "interests" strengthening the Opposition campaign fund, but the "interests" of the United States, the "trusts" are helping financially. A gentleman from New York, a shrewd and successful business man, said to the Examiner last night that he feared reciprocity would be defeated in Canada; he said the United States "trusts" interests were sending money into Canada for that purpose.

It doesn't seem good patriotism to oppose something the Conservatives consider a good thing for Canada, from a business point if voew, and worthy of adoption, but something to be opposed because it could be turned to party advantage.

The reciprocity agreement is a simple matter of trade—of business. There is no opposition to it in either party on its merits. It is only opposed by raising issues that have no bearing on the question.

TAKE YOUR CHOICE

What Liberal Government Has Done For Labour in 14 Years	What Conservative Government Did For Labour in 18 Years
Abolished sweat-shop methods.	Established Labour Day.
Provided for union or current wages on Government contracts, meaning millions of additional wages on the many millions spent on Government works.	(In this blank space make your X for Stratton and The Liberal Government.)
Established Labour Department, and placed it in charge of a Minister of the Crown.
Established Labour Gazette.
Relieved railway employees from the menace of unfair prosecution on account of railway accidents.
Enacted an Alien Labour Law.
Procured British legislation making it a crime to entice British workmen to Canada on false pretences.
Relieved workmen frim burden of specific taxation.
Increased Chinese head tax to prohibitory figure of $500.
Limited and abolished Japanese and Hindu immigration.
Provided for sanitary conditions and medical attention and hospitals in railway construction camps.
Enacted the Conciliation Act for the peaceable settlement of Labour disputes, which has been instrumental in the settlement of scores of disputes and saved the working man from millions of loss in wages, for unemployment, and saved millions to employers and the public.
And other beneficial and improving legislation which space forbids specifying.

Workingmen should stand by the party that has stood by them.

MR. STRATTON'S SPLENDING MEETING AT ENNISMORE

put through in a jiffy, as a simple amendment to the tariff act, is made the cause of an election that will cost the people of Canada a million dollars."

A Misapplied Million.

"And think," said Mr. Hall, pursuing this train of thought to the last ditch, "what we might do with a million dollars! The carloads of wheat or cattle or hogs or horses it would buy! The orphanages and asylums it would endow. The food and clothes that it represents! One million dollars—why it's one fifth the endowment of a modern university! Think of the bridges and wharves and docks it would build along the Trent Canal."

"This thrifty Opposition, which charges the Government with extravagance ,is quite ready to spend a million dollars on an unnecessary election. It talks extravagance and then looks for another way to blow in a million."

What Mr. Daniel O'Connell wanted to know was the record of the party that is opposing this reciprocity agreement. Had their trade politics succeeded so well in the past that we can bank on their wisdom in this matter?

Mr. O'Connell thought not. By the time he had done quoting the trade figures of the last fifteen years prior to 1896, as compared with the figures since that year, the audience thought not, too. The figures are an old story with politicians, but they are news to most country audiences, the average farmer not looking for his light reading in The Trade or Navigation blue books.

In Markets, Three's Company.

The human touch Mr. O'Connell gave these rather dry figures about industrial depression prior to 1896 was the terrible loss it involved to Canada of her citizenry when they were in the prime of their manhood and strength. This exodus from hard, high tariff conditions, explains why Chicago has 200,000 Canadians. Why, Michigan is half Canada, why most of the Eastern and Middle-west States are handsomely peopled with good Canadian-born citizens, now holding down responsible positions in the great republic.

"I needn't go into what happened," said Mr. O'Connell, "when Laurier gave tariff relief. That happy story is known to you all. The Fielding tariff has made good. It did the fair thing to the Mother country in the British preference and now it does the reasonable thing with a good neighbour, who is a splendily possible customer, by making a freer trade arrangement in natural products with the United States.

"At some time or other most of you have realised the folly of putting all your eggs in one basket. Well, it's the same way with markets. You can't have too many of them. Where, as the Minister of Railways said, is the store with three customers that won't take four?

ELLIOTS

PRISONER TO GIVE EVIDENCE

Beattie himself denounced as a lie a report that one of the jurors was one of his close personal friends.

"It is an effort to prejudice the case against me," said Beattie, in a clear, even voice. "The report is a lie out of whole cloth."

The prisoner would have talked further, but his counsel stopped him and added his own denial of the story.

There have been frequent rumors that there is one man on the jury who would save Henry's life by sticking out to the last for acquittal.

Chesterfield Court House, Va., Sept. 1.—From the obscurity of a lonely cell in the little brick house jail here Henry Clay Beattie, jr., this morning gazed expectantly at the Court House a few yards away, where some time today he was scheduled to explain to the jury the murder of his wife for which he was indicted just eighteen days ago. With the testimony of the prisoner himself the defense planned to conclude its case.

Before going on the stand the only man known to have actually witnessed the murder of Mrs. Beattie however, counsel for the defense prepared to call Douglas Beattie, a brother of the accused, as well as several of Henry's friends, some of them women, to testify not only to the good reputation of the prisoner, but to his happy relations with his wife, that would preclude any desire for her death.

Colin's Strong Evidence

Unquestionably the strongest witness of the prosecution has been Paul Beattie, a cousin of the accused. Paul says he bought for Henry the very shot gun which the prisoner has identified as the gun that snuffed out his wife's life, yet the prisoner himself declares that the highway man who he alleges committed the crime was bearded and six feet tall, a description which does not fit youthful Paul. It was expected that the prisoner would repeat his original explanation of the murder, tell again of how the highway man held him up, and deny once more that he ever took part in the purchase of any shot gun, or talked with Paul about any gun. Such was his testimony at the coroner's inquest, and counsel for the defense did not hesitate to say that it would be followed rigidly by the accused on the stand. The virtual issue in the case, therefore, is the veracity of the cousins, Paul and Henry.

It was not expected that Henry would take the stand before this afternoon.

The taking of a deposition at the home of Mrs. M. C. Stegner, who is ill, and who claims to have seen a mysterious man with a beard just before the tragedy, threatened to delay to-day's proceedings, and it was thought not unlikely that if the fifteen mile trip to the scene of the crime was made by the jury to-day the testimony of Henry Clay Beattie, jr., might not be reached until to-morrow.

Some Character Evidence

Sunlight streamed into the court-room for the first time in several days when court convened at 10:30 o'clock. The defense first introduced some character witnesses to continue the testimony begun yesterday, to show the good reputation of the prisoner, as well as that of E. H. Neblitt whose testimony presented an important contradiction to young Paul Beattie's story of the time of delivery of the gun to Henry. Alex. Wright captain of the Richmond police force testified that Mr. Neblitt was a truthful and reputable citizen of Richmond.

TRIP TO LAKE SIMCOE

MR. HUGH GUTHRIE SPOKE AT KEENE

Liberal Candidate's Fine Meeting---Mr. John Lang Urges His Friends to Stand Behind Mr. Kerr

Mr. F. D. Kerr, Liberal candidate for East Peterborough, has held a number of successful meetings thus far during the present campaign, but perhaps there has been none more successful than that which was held in the Town Hall, Keene, on Thursday night last. The hall was packed to the doors and the Liberal candidate was greeted with great enthusiasm. A feature of the meeting was the presence of a large number of ladies. The speakers were Mr. Hugh Guthrie, K.C., of Guelph, Mr. Kerr, and Mr. John Lang, ex-M.P.

When Chairman Armstrong called the meeting to order and introduced the first speaker of the evening, Mr. Hugh Guthrie, of Guelph, the audience settled down with the expectation of hearing a real treat and they were not disappointed. Mr. Guthrie lived up to his reputation as a clever and convincing speaker and delivered a masterly address on the subject of reciprocity. The manner in which he ridiculed the arguments of those who argue "Let well enough alone," worked his hearers up to a high pitch of enthusiasm.

Mr. F. D. Kerr, the candidate, dealt with the issues of the day, and showed very clearly that Mr. Sexsmith and his friends were objecting to reciprocity solely and simply upon the basis of opposing any good thing, provided it came from the opposite party.

Mr. John Lang, ex-M. P., in a short, but clean-cut and clear-headed speech, expressed his views upon reciprocity. He urged its adoption and pointed out the important benefits that would accrue therefrom. He referred to his own experience in the days of the former Reciprocity agreement. He strongly urged the election of Mr. Kerr, and expressed the hope that all his friends would rally around and elect him as member of East Peterborough. Mr. Lang's remarks were greeted with approval by the audience.

The meeting was brought to a close with cheers for the King and the Liberal candidate, and concluded with the singing by the entire assembly of the National Anthem.

PUBLIC LIBRARY NOTES

Notice has already appeared in the daily papers in regard to the extension of the holiday hours in the Library. It seems necessary, however, to once again draw attention to the fact that the hours for obtaining books will be until further notice from 2 p.m. to 9 p.m. daily. The reading room hours will be as formerly from 9.30 a.m. to 10 p.m. This change in the time has been rendered imperative owing to the cataloguing and classifying of the books which is now in actual operation.

Attention is once more drawn to the fact that magazines in the ladies' department of the reading room have been mutilated. As there is a heavy punishment attached to committing such an offence, it is as well that people should have the matter brought clearly before their minds. Another matter that needs public attention is that in one or two cases it has been discovered that borrowers of library books have been signing names of people as guarantors. It is not supposed that this is done with criminal intent, but as it is tantamount to forgery, it is as well that people should be warned of the seriousness of the act.

MR. F. D. KERR'S HAVELOCK MEETING

Hon. G. P. Graham Spoke to Electors---The Railway Town Showing a Desire for Reciprocity

Following up Mr. Kerr's very successful meeting at Havelock on Saturday night of last week, the Liberal candidate for East Peterborough held an afternoon meeting in the Town Hall on Thursday afternoon. There was a particularly good attendance, especially considering the fact that it was an afternoon affair. The speakers were Hon. George P. Graham, Minister of Railways and Canals, and the Liberal candidate, Mr. Kerr.

The chair was occupied by Mr. Alex. Matheson, of Havelock. The Hon. Mr. Graham delivered a most convincing address dealing with the Reciprocity agreement, showing clearly that it would promote trade and would, therefore, assist the railway men in every way. He also showed how reciprocity would benefit the producer and consumer. Dealing with the Grand Trunk Railway strike he showed that the Government had done all that was possible to assist the strikers, and that they had received from the official representatives of the railway men their thanks and approval. Mr. Graham's speech was listened to with great attention, and made a marked impression upon the audience.

The Liberal candidate, Mr. F. D. Kerr, followed with an eloquent speech, which was particularly well received by the large audience present.

The meeting concluded with cheers for the King, the Liberal Candidate and the Hon. George P. Graham.

SPLENDID NEW WHARF AT BRADEN'S LANDING OPENED

Smith Council Took Formal Possession at an Enjoyable Function Yesterday Afternoon---People of Neighbourhood Appreciate the Action of Mr. Stratton in Providing the Convenience.

The Bessie Butler sidled up to the new wharf at Braden's Landing with a fine, proud swing. She had on her deck the Reeve and the Deputy-Reeves and the township council of Smith, who were to take part in the dedication of the new wharf.

No time was lost in getting to work, as Mr. J. R. Stratton, the guest of honour, had a meeting at Ennismore in the evening and had to be on his way. Reeve Graham was voted into the chair and the pleasant business of a sunny afternoon was proceeded with. The new wharf has a new road leading to it, a fine macadam approach, where there were only logs before. Fifteen hundred dollars also goes with it in settlement of the claims of Smith township.

Superintendent McClellan of the Trent Canal on behalf of the Government, formally handed the wharf over to Smith township. He suggested that it be known hereafter as Pine Grove Park Wharf. There's a great deal in a name. The beauty of the new name for the wharf is that it calls attention to a pine grove that neighbours it. In days to come this pine grove will attract picnickers and tourists and will draw attention to Pine Grove Park as an ideal spot for campers, tourists and summer cottagers.

The Reeve Is Surprised.

Reeve Graham accepted the new wharf with the assurance that it was a gift free of conditions. The Dominion of Canada keeps it up. If a plank gets loose and nails are needed Smith township won't have to pay a cent.

Reeve Graham could hardly believe that a wharf could be landed so quietly, so short a time had elapsed between their asking for it, and Mr. Stratton telling him that the thing would be done.

"And there's rural mail boxes being placed all through Smith, too," said Reeve Graham. "We've got Mr. Stratton to thank for that, too."

"And talking about wharves, if another government had been in office, I wouldn't have had the face to ask for it."

"And you wouldn't have got it if you had." This voice seemed quite sure of its point.

The Candidate Congratulates.

"I am very much pleased," said J. R. Stratton, "to hand over to Smith Township the wharf that they have been asking for.

"When I saw the location of the proposed wharf, the rich farms circling it, and the beautiful surroundings, I felt it was the right thing to recommend a wharf for Smith township to the Government. Well, here's the wharf and a good job you've made of it."

Mr. Stratton went on to point out that small docks are relatively as important to the farmers they serve as great docks are to great cities like Toronto and Montreal. They are both conveniences for present trade and coaxers for more trade to come.

"There are," said Mr. Stratton, "fifty wharves between Bobcaygeon and Hastings, and not one of them but is a general public convenience. And not one of them was built a day too soon."

Mr. Stratton dwelt on the fact that no government since Confederation had done so much for West Peterborough as the present administration.

"They have granted," said Mr. Stratton, "every reasonable request. They no doubt think, with Josh Billing, that money is like manure — it doesn't fertilize unless it is spread."

What makes the wharf even more acceptable to Smith, is the fact that the government appraise, recommends, a $1500 settlement of damage claims to Smith township property affected by the high water.

Mr. Stratton called to mind an $80,000 dam not far away, and a $20,000 bridge.

"Altogether," Mr. Stratton remarked, "I don't think Smith has any reason to complain of lack of favours from the present government."

Mr. Stratton refused to discuss politics. "I leave it to the sober, second thought of the elector to appreciate what has been done. If you are satisfied, I am gratified."

When Thanks Are Due.

Deputy Reeve Garbutt looked forward with prophetic eye to the time when Pine Grove Park Wharf would be made more useful to the township, and he had no doubt but the additional usefulness would be fully appreciated.

"And," said Mr. Garbutt, "we have J. R. Stratton to thank for it."

Manager Eastwood of the Royal Bank said that Pine Grove Park Wharf was in line with the general interests of Peterborough County, one of whose greatest assets was its magnificent system of waterways.

"The money spent on this wharf," said Manager Eastwood, "is a mere bagatelle compared with the wharf's future usefulness."

Councillor William Davis, Young's Point, gave a brief, but convincing testimony.

"I want to return thanks to Mr. Stratton for this fine wharf and the fine road leading to it."

"And," added Council Davis, "while this spirit of improvement is in the air I think the municipality ought to do something now to clean up the grove and put it in fine shape." He wished Mr. Stratton every success, as he had no doubt he would have.

Councillor Jope gave credit to Mr. Stratton for his quick work in getting a wharf, that was a credit to the whole township.

Lest We Forget.

Councillor McKee rejoiced with the rest.

"But," he said, "we mustn't forget our present member, Mr. Stratton, the man that does all for us—all we ask and far more. I'm sure I wish him success on Sept. 21."

Mr. Daniel O'Connell opined that Peterborough County got so many public improvements because they had a representative who never took no for an answer.

County Clerk Elliott reflected that the farmer was producer and manufacturer in one, and looking at the wharf and the accommodation it would afford, he wondered if the farmer would take advantage of the larger market.

"But don't think I'm talking politics," said Mr. Elliott. "Don't think I'm hinting at anything."

Township Clerk Kelly seemed to think there was some hidden meaning in County Clerk Elliott's words for he said right out in meeting, "From a personal point of view I would like to see reciprocity carry. I think it's a good thing for everybody."

Talking of wharves and bridges and things, R. R. Hall reminded Smith township that J. R. Stratton, M. P. had helped to shift the maintenance of the swings from the county's shoulders, thus saving a sum for Peterborough county, which, capitalized at five per cent, would amount to $80,000.

"The present government," said Mr. Hall, "has spent over six million dollars on the Trent Canal. We have 168 miles of completed waterway in the southern section and survey parties are now at work on the northern section. This canal has a great future as a canal for barges of 500 tons or less. We need all the wharves we can get. And we need a man, with the breath of life in him, like J. R. Stratton, to get them for us."

Pine Grove Park Wharf having been thus plentifully dedicated with thanks where thanks were due, the meeting broke up with cheers for the King, for reciprocity and for Mr. Stratton, the candidate.

GOOD POSITIONS

The Peterborough Business College is a worthy link in a chain of Seven Business Colleges, located in the cities of London, Peterborough, Welland, and the towns of Orangeville, Walkerton, Wingham, and Clinton. Owing to its high-grade work it is affiliated with the Commercial Educators' Association of Canada. It is freely admitted that owing to these connections, its students get the very best positions. Fall openings are on Aug. 28th, and Sept. 5th, but at this school each student is instructed privately at his or her own desk; students may enter any day. Many students study all at home, and others partly at home and finish at the College. As Spotton Colleges are the largest trainers in Canada, and have thirty years' experience, it would be well for young people to get their training there. Last year Mr. Spotton trained over 1,200 young people and placed them in good positions. What he has done for thousands of others he can do for you.

Band Concert Season Over

The 57th Regimental Band finished their season of out-door concerts last evening when they played a splendid programme in Victoria Park to the delight of a large crowd. The band was in rare form and the audience showed their appreciation by a series of encores, nearly every number having to be repeated. Bandsman Cronk won a great hand from the crowd with his euphonium solo and the applause did not subside until he rose to repeat the number. The band's magnificent playing of the Barber of Seville brought forth enthusiastic applause, while the weird music of the Dervish Chorus in the Soudan was splendidly received. Remick's Hits No. 8 including such song hits as Underneath the Sugar Moon, Maybe You're Not the Only One Who Loves Her, Winter, Who Are You With To-Night, etc made a big hit and the ever popular Every Little Movement had to be repeated. The band has had to cancel the proferred engagement at Scarboro Beach owing to the inability to get their men off, but they will go to Toronto to fill a day's engagement at the Exhibition Wednesday next.

THE LAST CHANCE

The Government has thrown open for entry 25,000 homesteads in Western Canada in the Provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan. These homesteads are within 30 miles of present lines of the Canadian Northern Railway (and some much less) and all will undoubtedly be served by railway lines within a short time.

The low round trip homeseekers fares to points in Alberta and Saskatchewan are in effect only two more days this year, September 5th and 19th. The fares are low, the return limits long and the stop-over privilege is liberal.

Write at once for the latest Homeseekers' guide, fares and other particulars. The Canadian Northern Railway offers a choice of all routes reaches nearly every part of Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba, thus enabling one to examine all sections and make a wise selection.

All particulars can be obtained by writing to R. L. Fairbairn, Asst. General Passenger Agent, Canadian Northern Railway, Toronto, Ont.

SOME VISITING SALVATIONISTS

Messrs. Beckett, Earle, Henderson, Rowe and Wilfie, local officers of Hamilton No. 1 Corps, will be visiting Ensign and Mrs. Merrett for the holiday, and will assist in the services at the S. A. SUGAR CROP A FAILURE

Grocery circles here showed concern yesterday over the high prices now prevailing in the sugar market. There was another advance in granulated sugar during the day of 10c. per cwt.

Coming at the height of the season, this advance is of vital interest to consumers all over the country. It is attributed primarily to a poor sugar beet crop in Europe, following prolonged drought this summer. To make matters worse the Cuban crop, which furnishes the bulk of the raw material for American refiners, also proved short and prices began to soar.

Granulated is now selling for $5.68 per cwt. and No. 1 yellow at 5.28 per hundred weight.

INFLAMMATORY SPEECH BY BOURASSA ALLY

Hon. John Prevost Uses Violent Anti-British Language at Conservative Meeting in St. Jerome---Appeals to French Prejudice

ST. JEROME, QUE., AUG. 31.—"This is the flag which we are going to place on high on the 21st of September," said Hon. Jean Prevost today at St. Jerome, as he waved aloft the tri-colour of France. Then folding his arms about the flag, he said: "The red is for Prevost, still a Rouge; the blue is for Nantel, our Conservative ally, and the white for our beloved leader, Henri Bourassa."

Then, leaning far over the railing to be near his audience, he denounced the navy, England and everything but the French-Canadians and the flag of old France.

Wearing a photograph of Bourassa he appeared as the representative of the Nationalist leader, and in language unsurpassed in bitterness, denounced Laurier, the navy and British connection. "We will never be ready to give our families to be used as targets in defence of England," he declared, amid applause. "The training ships we possess are schools where our children will learn to shoot and later serve as targets for the cannon of Germany or Japan or China."

Equally bitter was the attack made by Mr. A. Fauteux, Conservative-Nationalist nominee in Two Mountains. In his address on behalf of Mr. Nantel he declared that the "Liberal party was pestilential and rotten. The real object of England in forcing a navy upon us was not to have the boats or our money, but the blood of French-Canadians, and Dr. Desjardines, Liberal candidate, lied when he said anything else."

Speaking of Canada's obligations to England, he said: "The French in this town had once to fight for their rights against England," and then added: "We have developed our railways and our ports, but the latter serve for English ships. We pay 20 millions of interest every year to England for their investments here, and you may be sure that England has taken the best, as she always does. We are not going to fight England's battles. If you men are wise you will elect men whose ideas are not to please England."

The meeting was a joint affair, and it was expected that Mr. Henri Bourassa would be present, but illness prevented him. However, his lieutenants, Prevost and Fauteux, did assist her. His answer to the language and expressed his ideals admirably.

For the Liberals, Messrs. Gauthier of L'Assumption and Dr. Desjardines of Terrebonne put up excellent arguments in favour of both the navy and reciprocity, but the traitorous language and flag-flying of Provost and Fauteux so inflamed the audience that Mr. Gauthier had to appeal to the chair to get a hearing.

Dr. Desjardines got an excellent hearing, because he spoke before either of his opponents. In his address he showed that England had protected the French language and religion as well as our commerce. We were, therefore, in honour bound to assist hr. His answer to the language of Messrs. Fauteux and Provost and their cry as they waved the tri-colour was: "We are all united as one in one flag."

Mr. McNicholl Inspects Some New Government Works--Owen Sound Will Cease To Be a Port Of Transhipment

With the opening of the new Canadian Pacific line from Peterborough to Victoria Harbour, Owen Sound will cease to be a port of transhipment for grain from the Great Lakes to the Atlantic.

Very much to this effect were the remarks made by Mr. David McNicoll, general manager of the Canadian Pacific Railway, who was in Toronto for about an hour yesterday afternoon. "It is not, and it never has been, a question of towns," said Mr. McNicoll; "it is a question of the shortest possible railway route between the Georgian Bay and Montreal. When our line from Victoria Harbour to Bethany, a few miles from Peterborough, is completed, we shall have a dead-level track all the way, and it will be many miles shorter than any other possible connection. In this way we shall be in a better position than ever before to compete for the grain-carrying trade from the West to the ocean. As for Owen Sound, it is a very well situated town, and has a number of thriving manufacturers, so it ought to be able to take care of itself. We intend to continue giving Owen Sound a first-class service by land and water just as long as it is warranted by the business."

Mr. McNicoll inspected the new work at Victoria Harbour on Wednesday, and was highly gratified with the progress made. There was some delay in the dredging earlier in the season, but the work is now going along at top speed, and the harbour is practically completed. The new railway line is now in running order for about forty miles of the distance to Bethany, and the roadbed is about ready for the rails in the remaining section, so Mr. McNicoll expects all will be finished and ready for the trains before the end of November. In company with Superintendent James Oborne, he traveled over the completed portion yesterday morning and motored the rest of the distance to Peterborough, coming in thence by special train to North Toronto in the afternoon.

Regarding a report that the Canadian Pacific Railway proposed making a summer resort at Victoria Harbour, Mr. McNicoll said this was a matter for the future. For the present their intentions ended with the establishment of a great commercial port, but it was possible the idea of exploiting the region for tourists might be considered at a later date. Asked for news of the recently-located duplicate line to Smith's Falls, which is to run along the lake shore through Port Hope and Belleville, he said several parties of engineers were busy preparing for construction work on various parts of the route. Double-tracking from Smith's Falls to Glen Tay, where the new line will branch off, has already been completed.

Mr. McNicoll left for Hamilton at 5.20 p.m., going in his private car by the "Honeymoon Special" New York express.

OLD COUNTRY ITEMS

CUNARD ENTERPRISE

The new Cunard liner Laconia, now afloat, is interesting; as she is the first of the British liners to embody in her construction Frahm's system of water-tanks for counteracting the rolling motion otherwise inevitable in the case of a ship steaming with a beam sea running. The remarkable results got with this system on one or two German ships give promise that this, the last remaining source of discomfort to Atlantic liner passengers, will be overcome, so that the Laconia is sure to be a popular ship in the service. The design of the new liner follows in its main features that applied to so many merchant ships under the direction of Mr. Andrew Laing, the managing director of the works, and, perhaps, the most interesting feature of the machinery is that its completion makes up over a quarter of a million horse-power, built under his direction for the Cunard Line. This is a notable achievement for any one engineer, and is the more remarkable, as the fourteen vessels, whose engines make up the 255,000 horse-power, have been built on three rivers, and by six different firms. Many of the ships, too, were record-breakers, and the influence of the progressive policy of the Cunard Company is reflected by the fact that these ships have reduced the ocean-crossing from seven and a half days to under five days, the sea speed having increased from 15 1-4 to 26 knots, while the power of the propelling machinery in one ship has advanced from about 6,300 horse-power to about 80,000 horse-power. The earlier ships, of course, were built on the Clyde, when Mr. Laing was responsible for the machinery production at Fairfield and the later ships on the Tyne and Wear. A further point is that since Mr. Laing went to the Walhead works fifteen years ago, the total production has averaged 60,000 horse-power per annum, or 830,000 horse-power in all, including machinery of all types for vessels of every class in the Royal and merchant services.

DOMINION NAVIES PROVISIONS OF NEW SCHEME

The Imperial naval defence scheme adopted by the Imperial Conference is published. In time of war Dominion ships when placed at the service of the Imperial Government, are to be under the control of the British Admiralty. Schedules define the stations of the Canadian and Australian fleets.

The naval services and forces of the Dominions of Canada and Australia will be exclusively under the control of their respective Governments.

The training and discipline of the naval forces of the Dominions will be generally uniform with the training and discipline of the fleet of the United Kingdom, and by arrangement the officers and men of the said forces will be interchangeable with those under the control of the British Admiralty.

The ships of each Dominion naval force will hoist at the stern the white ensign as the symbol of the authority of the Crown, and at the Jack staff the distinctive flag of the Dominion.

The Canadian and Australian Governments will have their own naval stations as agreed upon from time to time. The limits of the stations are as described in Schedule A (Canada) and Schedule B (Australia).

In the event of the Canadian or Australian Government desiring to send ships to a part of the British Empire outside their own respective stations, they will notify the British Admiralty.

GRACE DARLING'S COUNTRY

In the churchyard beneath the shadow of the ancient castle of Bamborough, on the Northumbrian coast, England, may be seen an altar tomb with the recumbent figure of a maiden sculptured in Portland stone, and surmounted by a canopy. It marks the resting place of Grace Darling, a native of Bamborough, who died in 1842 at the age of twenty-six, in the lighthouse of Longstone, one of the adjacent islets known as the Farnes.

A mile from Bamborough is the quaint little fishing port of Seahouses. Here a boat can be hired for a row among the twenty-five islands of the Farne group, many of them but wave-swept rocks, uninhabitable save by sea-birds, which congregate here in greater numbers and variety than elsewhere along the English coast.

Hither come the black backed gulls, those "swallows of the sea" gladly welcomed by fishermen as heralds of the spring. They rise in a screaming crowd as we approach and settle lightly again like great snowflakes. On yonder rock is a colony of eider ducks that have flown from the Norwegian fiords and are never seen further south than the Farne Islands, and not far away is an islet sacred to the puffin, most ludicrous of all birds, that gaze at us with bewildered eyes beneath lids like ancient horn spectacles, and stumble and roll over as they hurry away in alarm.

The rocky heights called the Pinnacles will greatly interest the bird-lover. The summit is covered with a jostling crowd of guillemots sitting upright as if proud to display their expansive white breasts. The big solitary egg that this bird lays is in size, shape, and color curiously like that of the extinct great auk.

This part of the Northumberland coast where Grace Darling spent the whole of her life fascinates not only students of bird life and lovers of rugged coast scenery, but all who are interested in Early English history. A mile or two to the north is Holy Island, the Lindisfarne of history and romance. Hither the devoted Aidan brought from Ireland in the seventh century the message of the Gospel; and here, a few years later, the saintly Cuthbert founded the Abbey whose ruins to-day are the delight of the antiquarian and the lover of picturesque architecture. Sir Walter Scott in the first two cantos of Marmion has much to say of Lindisfarne Abbey, which he describes as—

"A solemn, huge, and dark-red pile
Placed on the margin of the isle."

But as we row among the Farnes the spot that most allures us is the grey lighthouse on Longstone Island, from which on a dark and gusty night in September, 1838, Grace Darling faced the storm in her father's boat and won an abiding place in British hearts.

FAMOUS ARTIST DEAD SIR EDWIN ABBEY, R.A.

The death occurred the other day at his residence in Chelsea, England, of Mr. Edwin Abbey, R.A., A.R.W.S. The deceased had been suffering for some time from an internal complaint, to which he eventually succumbed, having fifty-nine years of age at the time of his death. In spite of his illness, he has been for some time engaged on a series of panels for the decoration of the State Capitol, Pennsylvania, the work being unfinished at the time of his decease.

Mr. Abbey was born at Philadelphia on April 1, 1852, and educated at the Pennsylvania Academy of Fine Arts. He came to England for Messrs Harper Brothers in 1878, and has made his home in England since then. Mr. Abbey's Academy exhibits began in the year 1880 with a subject taken from Herrick's "Corinna's gone a-Maying," a scene which the artist represents as taking place at early cock-crow. "Fiametta's Song" was Mr. Abbey's next essay, and proved something of a new departure, seeing that it depicted a romantic Italian grove redolent in the finest sense of Boccaccio, yet solemn with its avenue of giant cypresses. Of Mr. Abbey's greatest success, "Richard, Duke of Gloster, and the Lady Anne," exhibited in the Royal Academy in 1896, and so well known for its excellent black and white production, little need be added here. That it raised its author with a bound to the front rank of living painters is now indisputable. Following quickly on its heels in 1897 came the famous "Hamlet," a picture which, like many another of the artist's, has been largely repainted since it was exhibited. "King Lear's Daughters," seen in 1898, shows in a harmony of reds and oranges contrasted with the artist's subtle greys and yellows Cordelia taking leave of her treacherous sisters. Conceived in another vein was "The Bridge," a canvas which delineates a jester playing his mandoline at sundown as the monks advance to vespers, and which preceded by a year the picture called "The Pavane," commissioned by Mr. Whitelaw Reid.

More important perhaps than ever was the great panel presented by the Merchant Taylors and the Skinners' Company to the Royal Exchange, for in this work Mr. Abbey in a way prepared himself for his magnum opus, his series of decorations for the great public library at Boston. This mighty task was undertaken conjointly with Mr. John Sargent.

At the Coronation of King Edward Mr. Abbey was commissioned to paint the official picture of the ceremony, a work which was deservedly very warmly commended. A great deal of Mr. Abbey's artistic productions have been taken to America, where his work is much admired. "The Quest of the Holy Grail" hangs in the Boston Public Library.

Mr. Abbey was an enthusiastic cricketer, and at Fairford, Gloucestershire, where he had a country house, he took an active interest in the game.

AT TORONTO EXHIBITION

ROTARY ENGINES

The Augustine Automatic Rotary Engine Co., of Canada, Ltd., is making a most interesting exhibit at its salesrooms, No. 80 King St. E., of the wonderful prime mover the invention of a Canadian, now resident in the States. While the engine is the size of a toy, it is actually a practical life size engine, and its operations are rightfully regarded as marvelous.

BIRD'S DINING HALL

Bird's Dining Hall, just back of the Grand Stand in a spacious restaurant with a seating capacity of 500. "All you can eat for a quarter" is the proud boast of Mr. Bird, whose motto is "wholesome food and prompt attention." When you get hungry at the Exhibition look out for Bird's great Dining Hall and have a good meal all for 25 cents.

JOHN'S GLASS BLOWERS

As usual John's troupe of expert glass blowers is the most popular show on the Midway. All sorts of fancy and useful articles are blown in glass and the skill of the workers is most interesting. Every visitor to the tent receives a souvenir of some glass blown article.

SAW MILL MACHINERY

Those visiting the Toronto Exhibition should see the exhibit of the G. Walker Green Co., Ltd., of Peterborough. This consists of a full line of Lath, Shingle and Portable Saw Mill Machinery, besides a wood-sawing machine for the farmer. The exhibit is situated in the east end of Machinery Hall and is in full operation.

SEALSHIPT OYSTERS

It's remarkable how quick the exhibition crowd takes to something new. The booth of the Producer's Sales Co., selling agents for the famous Sealshipt Oysters, was crowded from opening to closing yesterday. Sealshipt Oysters were served by the plate and in cocktails, and the visitors apparently couldn't get enough. The oysters were the first of the season, sweet and fresh, and the oyster lovers who had been deprived of the delicacy all summer were surely given a treat.

THE CARY SAFE

A Cary Safe is one of the best guarantees of security against fire and burglary. The place to get a good view of these safes is in the exhibit of Ford & Featherstone of Hamilton in the left aisle of the Industrial Building. This is the eighth exhibit of Ford & Featherstone at the Canadian National Exhibition. The Cary safe is world renowned. A number of them were in the disastrous fires of Porcupine and Cochrane. The people up there, at the last moment before the fire swept the town, packed their valuables in the Cary Safes, and on opening after the great fires found them in perfect condition, and there has been shipped to these towns since a great many Cary Safes. "There is no fire too hot for the Cary." Be sure to see their exhibit when visiting the Canadian National Exhibition at Toronto.

NO MORE HOT BOXES

Alonzo W. Spooner's Copperine exhibit is on its old stand in the stove department of the Process Building again this year. It seems hardly necessary to describe an article which has been on the market and in general use among manufacturers and millmen for a quarter of a century, but in case there are still a few who are ignorant of its uses, it may benaid that Copperine is a non-fibrous, anti-friction box metal; it will stand a great weight and great speed and you can't fire it out. It was used on the Lawrie engines, the largest on the continent of America, and is running on many steamships on the ocean.

INDEPENDENT ORDER OF FORESTERS

The premier position at the head of Society Row is once more occupied by the Independent Order of Foresters. A warm welcome awaits all brethren in the spacious tent, furnished with mission oak furniture and beautifully decorated with ferns, palms and Gladiola. Those in charge are:—Brother G. A. Mitchell, Superintendent of Field Work, Brother Jas. Glendenning and Brother John T. Thompson, I. S. C. R's.

A chat with Brother Mitchell on the Order's wonderful progress, particularly on the fraternal side during the past year, is most interesting. For instance, he stated that the Orphanage which appeals so warmly to the 240,000 members is now ministering to upwards of 80 children. These are, the children of deceased members, who did not leave sufficient means to provide for them.

In these cases, the Order assumes all responsibility of caring for these children by educating them and giving them a proper training until they reach the age of sixteen. After that age we consider they are strong and able to fight the battle of life themselves, but instead of having them on their own resources the Order assumes the responsibility of getting them employment and they reach the age of twenty-one. This is a work that speaks for itself, that demonstrates the true meaning of practical Fraternity, therefore Brother Mitchell does not hesitate in saying the strides the Order is making are none too many for the wonderful benefits that they give.

A hearty welcome is tendered to all members and their friends when visiting the Fair. The I. O. F. tent is one of the most restful spots on the ground, and there they will learn more about the Order by asking those in charge. Each Forester is given a souvenir blotter with a cut of the Orphanage and the Sanitarium.

As Hon. George P. Graham put it at Brockville "Did you ever hear of the removal of taxation on food increasing the cost of living?"

THE FINANCE COMMITTEE WILL TAKE NO ACTION

Decide Not to Give the Peterborough Industrial Exhibition the Additional Assistance They Require---Number of Accounts Were Passed at Last Night's Meeting.

The finance committee met last evening and transacted some business, the principal part of which was the passing of accounts.

There were present Ald. Bradburn, chairman; alderman Duncan and Metheral.

A letter was read from the Industrial Exhibition Board thanking the committee for the donation of $400, they had contributed, and respectfully requesting that an additional appropriation be donated to assist in covering the expense of erecting the new grand stand which will cost $8000.

It was moved by Ald. Metheral and seconded by Ald. Duncan that no action be taken.

The heavy expenses already incurred by the committee warranted them to spend their money very cautiously, so it was deemed necessary to take no action as regards this request.

ALL YOUR STOMACH TROUBLE VANISHES

No Indigestion, Gas, Heartburn or Dyspepsia Five Minutes Later

Every year regularly more than a million stomach sufferers in the United States, England and Canada take Pape's Diapepsin, and realise not only immediate, but lasting relief.

This harmless preparation will digest anything you eat and overcome a sour, gassy or out-of-order stomach five minutes afterwards.

If your meals don't fit comfortably, or what you eat lies like a lump of lead in your stomach, or if you have heartburn, that is a sign of Indigestion.

Get from your Pharmacist a 50-cent case of Pape's Diapepsin and take a dose just as soon as you can. There will be no sour risings, no belching of undigested food mixed with acid, no stomach gas or heartburn, fullness or heavy feeling in the stomach, Nausea, Debilitating Headaches, Dizziness or Intestinal griping. This will all go, and, besides, there will be no sour food left over in the stomach to poison your breath with nauseous odours.

Pape's Diapepsin is a certain cure for out-of-order stomachs, because it takes hold of your food and digests it just the same as if your stomach wasn't there.

Relief in five minutes from all stomach misery is waiting for you at any drug store.

These large 50-cent cases contain more than sufficient to thoroughly cure almost any case of Dyspepsia, Indigestion or any other stomach disorder.

NEWEST SKIRT SLIT TO REVEAL THE ANKLES

New York, Sept. 1.—Bringing with him the latest word in feminine fashion from the Rue de Paris in Trouville, Charles C. Kursman, the milliner has arrived.

"If I were asked to name the chief characteristic of the new modes," Mr. Kursman said, "I would say curves. The knell of the hobble skirt has sounded. Now everything is curves. The newest skirt is open in the front at the bottom to an extent that reveals the ankles. The fact means that with the new skirt much attention must be given to footwear.

"With the new skirt there is possible the attainment of more freedom of movement. It is also more graceful than the tighter skirt which it has superseded.

"So far as materials are concerned the plaids and reversible materials are most in demand for morning wear shopping and motoring. For afternoon wear velvets and satins, the trimmings of which are gold silver or shadow laces are now worn.

"Evening dresses are made of brocaded satins or velvets with gold brocaded tissues, brilliants or tube beads Trains with long points are much worn.

"The tendency seems to be toward lines that are simpler than those that have been in vogue.

"Curves are conspicuous in all the newest modes, and the day of the tight fitting hobble seems to have passed.

"The trimmings in the large velvet hats which are now in the mode, are fur, brilliants, tube beads, bird of paradise and ostrich feathers. A great deal of fur will be worn. The brilliants and tube beads willbe much used in connection with the feathers.

"In dressing the hair, bands, caps and crowns will be most essential, and more attention now seems to be paid to the dressing of the hair than has been the case.

OBITUARY

WILLIAM LLOYD.

In the death of Mr. William Lloyd, which occurred yesterday, Peterborough lost one of her most highly respected citizens.

Deceased who was in his 82nd year has ben ailing for the past two years, therefore his death was not unexpected. He was born in England in the year 1829 and in 1861 he emigrated to this country and has been a resident of this city ever since.

The late Mr. Lloyd was a contractor by trade and was therefore prominently identified with the early growth of the city. He continued in the business until the weight of advancing years demanded that a less strenous occupation be sought.

He leaves to mourn his loss a sorrowing wife, son and daughter, W. J. Lloyd of Toronto and Mrs. J. Tighe, of Detroit.

The funeral which will be conducted by the Sons of England, will leave the family residence, 197 Bethune street Monday. Interment at Little Lake cemetery.

Inherited a Fortune.

Chatham, Sept. 2.—F. Garner, Richmond street, who conducts a tailoring and pressing establishment on West King street, two door east of Bradley's grocery, received word that he had been left heir to £10,000. The legacy was left by a bachelor uncle, who left £10,000 each to Mr. Garner and his surviving brothers, their father being a favorite brother. Mr. Garner has a wife and a family of seven. He was born in the old country and came to Chatham about sixteen years ago, where he has since worked at his trade as a tailor and cutter.

FATHER MURDERED, DAUGHTER ELOPES

After Her Father Was Assassinated Mohammedan Girl Runs Away with a Greek Neighbor

There has been a romantic sequel to the tragedy of the political murder in Constantinople recently of Zeki Bey, the editor of an Opposition paper. The day after her father's assassination, Zeki Bey's daughter, a girl of nineteen years, eloped with a Greek who was a neighbor of the family. Instant flight and the closest secrecy were necessary, as the idea of a union between a Mohammedan girl and a Christian rouses the fanatical religious sentiment of the Turks to frenzy, and would probably be punished with death. The two lovers took the suburban train for Constantinople. In the railway carriage the girl changed the thick black veil which Turkish women are compelled by law to wear, for a European hat. From Constantinople they went by steamer to Piraeus, the Port of Athens. Here the news of their flight had arrived before them, and the Turkish Consul boarded the steamer to arrest the girl. The Greek harbor officials questioned his authority and the lovers hastened ashore to a hotel, where a policeman was detailed to guard them from further molestation. In Constantinople much religious fury has been kindled by the story of the lovers' escape.

AUSTRO-HUNGARIAN PARLIAMENT

After Harsh Criticisms of English the Members Fight Among Themselves

Sabre duels, fist fights and oratorical pyrotechnics have been enlivening the sessions of the lower House of the Austria-Hungarian Parliament. Herr Silvester, President of the Lower House, was the first to attract attention by an attack upon England, which, inferentially, hit at Germany. Herr Sylvester characterised England as "always interfering with others' affairs in the Adriatic," and advocated a close alliance between Hungary, Italy and France to break Britain's power.

The next publicity stunt of the Austria-Hungarian Parliament was a sabre duel prefaced by a fist-fight in the Chamber of the Lower House. The occasion for this display of undiplomatic prowess was the debate in the Reform Bill; the participants were M. Posegay, of the Koesuth party, and M. Pal, of the Government party. During this debate M. Posegay rushed at M. Pal and dealt him a staggering blow in the face. M. Pal, recovering quickly, returned the blow, and a fight of the first water was soon on, with members of the different factions freely joining in.

The serious side of the affair came a few hours later when M. Pal and his assailant adjourned to a convenient field and fought for forty minutes with sabres. During this encounter M. Posegay received a severe blow on the head and M. Pal was hit on the shoulder.

HERTIZIAN WAVES

Being Used to Advantage in the Maturing of Champagne

Most persons admit that the possibilities of wireless are limitless, but few would associate Hertzian waves with the maturing of champagne. Radio-telegraphy, for want of a better expression, has already been impressed by distillers of perfumes to extract their essences from flowers, etc., and now the principle has been adopted by the champagne growers at Epernay, where they have installed in their caves an apparatus which introduces Hertzian waves. This application of electricity is described by a Paris contemporary as a great success. It seems, according to the authority before referred to, that waste products due to fermentation, are thrown off upon the casks, and thereby the wine is improved.

RICH ADORNMENTS

Toronto Women Are Said to Wear About $6,000,000 Worth

The Trader and Canadian Jeweller says that $3,000,000 represents the investment of Torontonians in gold and jewelled adornments. There is a lady in Toronto, the paper says, who owns a necklace worth $35,000. It is not astonishingly gorgeous to look at. The same lady has the finest collection of gems in Toronto, but it is the most valuable ornament in the city, the total value of which is estimated at between $125,000 and $150,000. It includes various sets of ornaments and one ring, set with a ruby and two diamonds, worth $2,000. Not half a dozen pieces in the collection are of diamonds only. The husband of this lady has a rare collection of jewels himself, including a pearl tie-pin and a set of diamond-studded cuff-links worth $6,000. At least half a dozen Toronto ladies have jewellery worth from $50,000 to $60,000. Continuing with the pearl necklaces, we find that few are owned between the range of the two already mentioned and those worth $5,000—not more than half a dozen. These are valued at about $10,000 apiece. Five thousand dollar pearl necklaces are owned by from twenty to twenty-five society women, and $1,000 necklets of the same gems are quite numerous. With the latter we come to the younger set of Toronto's Four Hundred. Wealthy men here apparently think nothing of presenting their daughters with ornaments of this price, for the $1,000 pearl necklaces number fully fifty, as many of these being owned by maids as matrons. Below this price these ornaments are not popular with the fastidious wealthy. However, about one hundred pearl necklaces worth between $1,000 and $500—most of them costing nearer the latter figure.

Most Toronto women who buy necklaces—the most popular of all ornaments that are worth less than $1,000, go in for diamonds. The diamond necklaces are nearly all of the festoon pattern, and they are very brilliant, their settings adding materially to their display. About two hundred and fifty of these, ranging in cost from $750 to $3,500, are worn in Toronto, most of them being worth something nearer the former sum than the latter. One lady has a diamond necklace which cost $3,000. It is not a festoon, but a single string of stones, and is the most valuable necklace of the fascinating, sparkling gems in the city. The most costly all-diamond ornament of any kind worn in Toronto is owned by the wife of a millionaire prominent in society. It is a magnificent corsage piece, and is reputed to be worth $12,000.

A Millinery Contrivance

A French milliner has hit on the idea of fitting the headgear of her clients with little, round spy-glasses. The spy-glass is placed inside the brim of the hat, and is a tiny reflector which forms the heart of a gland rose, and more often it nestles in a choux of ribbon. It is visible, of course, only to its wearer, who by its aid can see exactly what kind of impression she has succeeded in creating upon those behind her.

RESTORE GRAY HAIR TO NATURAL COLOR

By Common Garden Sage, a Simple Remedy for Dandruff, Falling, Faded, Gray Hair.

The old idea of using sage for darkening the hair is again coming in vogue. Our grandmothers used to have dark, glossy hair at the age of seventy-five, while our mothers have white hair before they are fifty. Our grandmothers used to make a "sage tea" and apply it to their hair. The tea made their hair soft and glossy, and gradually restored the natural color.

One objection to using such a preparation was the trouble of making it, especially as it had to be made every two or three days, on account of souring quickly. This objection has been overcome, and by asking almost any first-class druggist for Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Hair Remedy the public can get a superior preparation of sage, with the admixture of sulphur, another valuable remedy for hair and scalp troubles. Daily use of this preparation will not only quickly restore the color of the hair, but will also stop the hair from falling out and make it grow.

This preparation is offered to the public at fifty cents a bottle, and is recommended and sold by all druggists.

MADE A BAD ERROR

Message With Which M. Cambon Has Been Sent to Berlin Is Really France's Final Word in the Morocco Question, Say London Papers — London Is Pleased With Moroccan Situation.

New York, Sept. 2.—A London cable to The Times yesterday morning says: "Ultimatum" is the term used in London to describe the character of the written instructions which the French ambassador at Berlin, Jules Cambon, carried from Paris on his return to his post to resume the negotiations on the Morocco question.

The word has an ugly sound, and its use was avoided by the newspapers yesterday morning, but throughout yesterday ever since the Echo de Paris published an astute summarizing the draft of the instructions for M. Cambon, drawn up by the French Cabinet, no hesitation was shown here in so interpreting them. One paper, indeed, goes the length of speaking of the ultimate concessions that France can offer to Germany in exchange for definite guarantees with regard to Morocco."

There is confident expectation here that Germany will swallow the pill, just as there exists a certain amount of satisfaction at the thought that she will not find it to her liking.

German resentment at the part which England, rightly or wrongly, is supposed to be playing is growing apace, and the persistent enmity of Great Britain toward Germany is the key-note of many Berlin newspaper articles.

There is a disposition here to consider the Teutonic attacks upon England as a red herring drawn across the trail. "The octopus when alarmed tries to hid itself by discharging an inky cloud," says The Daily Mail. "Germany has adopted this ruse, and the re-opening of the negotiations with France have been made the occasion of another outburst against Great Britain."

France Is Hopeful.

Paris, Sept. 2.—The French Foreign Office, it is understood, has not received any sure indication that Germany will accept the French proposals for a settlement of the Moroccan question, yet a measure of confidence is felt in an early agreement because of the extent of the compensations which are to be offered by France. Since these are Central African areas, it is not supposed that Germany would proceed to extreme lengths over a few thousand square miles, more or less.

The real difficulty in the way of an early settlement, it is believed at the Foreign Office, lies in the special commercial and mining guarantees which Germany may seek in Morocco, as nothing can be given Germany in Morocco which Great Britain does not possess. Besides, anything like special privileges would afford endless occasions for the re-opening of the controversy on questions of interpretation.

The French and British Governments have reached the fullest mutual agreement upon every phase of the Franco-German dispute.

Anti-English Meetings.

London, Sept. 2.—A fair amount of war insurance was offered Thursday, and with the market becoming restricted the rates advanced further on the risk of war breaking out between certain European powers within two months. Some risks were accepted at 5 per cent. and in some cases 10 per cent. was quoted.

A Morocco mass meeting was held in Berlin Thursday night, and all accounts indicate that the gathering resolved itself into a violent demonstration against England. There has been no similar public outburst of Anglophobia in Germany since the days of the Boer war.

References to France were couched in terms of friendship, and were greeted with something approaching enthusiasm.

It may be added that even in London circles where Germanphobia is not rampant, it is generally believed that the German action at Agadir was taken in the belief that England was so much occupied with domestic affairs that she could pay little or no attention to foreign matters, and that the decisive position taken up by the Liberal Government was a complete surprise to the German Foreign Office.

Black Hand in Montreal.

Montreal, Sept. 2.—That the diabolical power of the Black Hand was responsible for the non-appearance of a complainant in court, was the statement made by Constable Raoul Trudel yesterday morning.

"He has been visited," continued the constable, "by swarthy individuals who threatened him with vengeance were he to appear in court this morning to testify against this man."

When the case of John Papali, accused of stabbing George Osgood, was called, it was noticed that the complainant was missing. Osgood received a cut in the neck last Friday while he was engaged in fisticuffs with another man. Papali is charged with aggravated assault in connection with the affair.

Fell From Scaffold.

Montreal, Sept. 2.—In a fall of 75 feet from a scaffold in course of erection for construction work at the Dominion Spool & Cotton Co., George Moore, aged 44, lost his life yesterday. After hearing the evidence of his foreman, J. P. Kay, and another workman, J. E. Cooper, Coroner McMahon decided an inquest was unnecessary.

Food Riots Continue.

Paris, France, Sept. 2.—Rioting, which broke out at St. Quentin on Thursday evening over the high price of food, lasted all night. A regiment of infantry and a squadron of cavalry called out to quell the disturbance were unable to cope with the mob, which plundered shops in widely separated streets at the same time.

OFFICERS ELECTED

Ald. Richter of London Says That Municipal Enterprises Should Be Productive of Five Per Cent. to Create Sinking Fund—Portfolio of Municipal Affairs Is Recommended by A. R. Bunnell.

Toronto, Sept. 2.—The distribution of the profits of municipally owned utilities was the main subject of discussion at yesterday's session of the Ontario Municipal Association. That a public utility should remain a commercial venture and be managed in a way that would assure profits of at least five per cent., was the opinion of Ald. Richter of London. He favored the establishment of a sinking fund that would be increased until large enough to replace the public works when necessary. All the residents benefited from the utilities and it was only fair that they should all contribute to a sinking fund for renewals, instead of the taxpayers alone.

His stand was opposed by Charles Gordon of Owen Sound, where all utilities are publicly owned. Mr. Gordon believed that the benefits should be for all the people, and the rates reduced as low as possible. Mayor Guest of St. Thomas also wanted wate rand gas sold at cost, but these opinions did not meet with the full concurrence of the meeting.

A. R. Bunnell, the city treasurer of Brantford, proposed the establishment by the Provincial Government of a portfolio on municipal affairs. His department should have the adjusting of rates and municipal auditing and other regulations under its control.

The following officers were elected: President, Controller F. S. Spence of Toronto; vice-presidents, first, Mayor Beattie of London; second, Mayor F. Guest of St. Thomas; third, W. A. Clark, clerk of York County; fourth, W. Law, county clerk of Huron; fifth, W. H. Schmaltz, mayor of Berlin; executive committee, the Mayors of Toronto, Hamilton and Owen Sound, City Solicitor Doherty of St. Thomas, City Solicitor Johnson of Toronto, Clerk Kent of Hamilton, Reeve S. F. Glass of London Township, City Treasurer Bunnell of Brantford, Ald. Richter of London, E. A. Hugell, secretary of the rural section, and Ald. Stroud of London.

BRIEFS FROM THE WIRES.

Hollander families, 250 in number, each of which will have $5,000 cash to invest in farm property, will arrive in Canada next spring.

J. B. Hatkin, for years private secretary of Hon. Frank Oliver, has been appointed commissioner of national parks, with headquarters in Ottawa.

It is stated that Hon. Clifford Sifton intends to spend three days prior to election day in his former constituency, speaking in Brandon, Souris and Hartney.

A general strike of the South Wales coal miners for a minimum wage scale has been averted owing to the influence brought to bear with them by W. Abraham, M.P.

The resignation of Prof. N. F. Dupuis as dean of the faculty of practical science at Queen's took place yesterday. His successor will be appointed next month.

Dr. W. O. Ryan, said to have been a wealthy physician, formerly of Springfield, Ill., shot and killed his wife and then committed suicide at their home in Los Angeles.

Frank Lefave, a laborer in the stores department of the Canadian General Electric Co. at Peterboro, was crushed to death yesterday when he was caught between a freight car door and the loading platform.

Charles Whitcomb, employed at the locomotive works, Kingston, went inside the boiler to clean it out, unaware to other men. While there the steam was turned on and he was almost scalded to death before he got out. He will recover.

Girl Is Missing.

Beamsville, Sept. 2.—Pearl McTaggart, 17 years of age, is missing from her home here. Thursday she was seen talking to a foreigner, and when questioned as to who he was said he was a Detroit man, and that they had met on the mountain recently. Her clothes tied by a rope were found hanging from her window, showing that she had lowered herself out of the window during the night. The police are searching for her. It is believed she may have gone to Toronto.

Irish Coal Development.

London, Sept. 2.—The Standard understands that John Hays Hammond, the American promoter, has offered to organise a syndicate to construct a light railway to assist in the development of the newly-opened coal fields in Leinster, Ireland. The railway would connect the great coal area of Castlecomer Plain, in the Counties of Carlow and Kilkenny, with the industrial centres of the north of Ireland.

Christian Endeavor Convention.

Toronto, Sept. 2.—The Ontario and Quebec Christian Endeavor Unions are arranging for a convention in Ottawa on Sept. 12 to commemorate the sixtieth anniversary of the birth, near Ottawa, of the founder of the Christian Endeavor movement, Rev. Francis Clark, D.D., LL.D. Dr. Clark has promised to attend this convention, and will bring with him Earl Lehman, one of the ablest of the many field secretaries of the United Society of Christian Endeavor. Both will deliver addresses on Christian Endeavor work.

A feature of the convention will be a trip to Aylmer, the birthplace of Dr. Clark, and the holding of a memorial service at the grave of his mother near that town. This trip will be taken on the afternoon of the convention day, and will be followed by a banquet and mass meeting in Ottawa.

CANDIDATE CHOSEN

Owing to the Fact That Mr. W. M. German, an Anti-Reciprocity Liberal, Has Determined to Fight the Government, the Welland Organization Insists on Having a Man Who Will Support It.

Welland, Sept. 2.—Over two hundred Welland Liberals met here yesterday and in a most harmonious and enthusiastic meeting, nominated Mr. Louis Kinnear of Port Colborne as a straight reciprocity candidate.

The Liberals at last week's convention did not endorse W. M. German, but simply decided not to oppose him. He therefore stands as a self-constituted candidate. The Liberal delegates were, almost to a man, in favor of reciprocity, and considerable dissatisfaction was shown by quite a number of the delegates that an out-and-out reciprocity candidate was not put up by the Liberals at that time. Now that Mr. German announces his intention of opposing the Government on reciprocity the local Liberals have decided to have another man.

A. J. Bea, president of the Pelham Liberal Association, called the meeting together. He said that the convention had been called to protest against dishonorable dealing to which the previous convention had been subjected. It was clearly evident in the speeches which followed that Mr. German had made many enemies among his old-time friends; one man even went so far as to accuse him of being connected with the "interests." Louis Kinnear, who later received the nomination, took the chair after being appointed by motion. "Instead of resigning Mr. German has placed himself in line with the opponents to the pact. At the Conservative convention it was made plain that he played to both sides. In the committee room at our convention he told us he would vote for reciprocity, and afterwards he told the convention that he would not vote favorable if his vote was not needed. It is for these reasons that this convention has been called," said the prospective candidate.

Hon. Richard Harcourt remarked that he was glad to see so many, as he termed them, real Liberals at the meeting. "Canada's lean years were under Sir John A. Macdonald's period," he said.

The nominations were then made. Mr. Kinnear was nominated by A. J. Mabee of Fort Erie, and A. H. Schrigley, and made unanimous by a motion of B. Atkinson and J. Steele. Others who were nominated were Hon. Richard Harcourt, J. F. Gross, J. F. Guenthier, Wilson Cline. All withdrew.

Personalities in South York.

Toronto, Sept. 2.—Louis Heyd, K.C., intimated in a letter he has sent to W. F. Maclean that he intends to turn the joint meetings that he proposed with the Conservative candidate in South York into a discussion, not of reciprocity and the real issues of the campaign, but a personal discussion concerning W. F.'s business conduct.

He gives notice that he intends to talk about the Farmers' Bank, a circular to the members of the C.M.A. sent out by the manager of The World a year ago, "the inconsistent attitude and policies which you and The World newspaper have taken on different occasions," and "other matters which it is unnecessary at the present time to mention."

May Defer Elections.

Ottawa, Sept. 2.—There is still a chance of deferred elections in Northern Ontario. The lists are coming in to the clerk of the Crown-in-Chancery, many having already arrived, including the lists for Nipissing and sufficient progress is being made in regard to the lists to allow polling in all of the unorganized districts on Sept. 21st, but there is a possibility that the election may be held up by appeals. J. G. Foley, clerk of the Crown-in-Chancery, has no word yet of deferred elections in any of the western provinces.

Sifton's Ontario Dates.

Ottawa, Sept. 2.—It was announced yesterday that Hon. Clifford Sifton will meet at these places on the following dates: Ottawa, Sept. 5; North Lanark, Sept. 6; Cobourg, Sept. 7; Oshawa, Sept. 8; Weston, Sept. 9; Aylmer, Ont., Sept. 11; Stratford or St. Mary's, Sept. 12; Newmarket, Sept. 13; Port Hope, Sept. 15; Windsor, Sept. 16.

Clergyman Before Convention.

Ottawa, Sept. 2.—At the Conservative nominations for Carleton County at Stittsville, Ont., at noon yesterday four were nominated, namely, W. S. Garland, Ottawa; Edward Kidd, North Gower; Rev. H. Stacey, Westboro, and E. T. Richardson, Britannia.

Condemned Race Cry.

Berlin, Sept. 2.—An enthusiastic rally in support of Mayor Weichel of Waterloo, Conservative candidate in Waterloo, was held on Wellesley Village last night. Besides the candidate, the speakers were Dr. Lackner, M.P.P., Hon. Adam Beck, Mr. Hibner, a prominent Berlin merchant, and H. S. Murphy, K.C., of Listowel.

Hon. Mr. Beck severely condemned the attempt of Hon. Mr. King to raise the race cry, and said that, while he held his own German forefathers in deep respect, he deemed that his native land commanded his deepest affection.

Skyscrapers Lean Over.

New York, Sept. 2.—A Chicago despatch says: The discovery that the Unity building, a sixteen-storey Dearborn street structure, is three feet out of plumb at the skyline, has set the city building inspectors investigating. They say every skyscraper in the city is leaning more or less. The 21-storey Masonic Temple is seriously out of plumb, while the Ellsworth building and the Pullman building also, are imitating the Tower of Pisa. The owners of the Unity building have been ordered to straighten it up, as it threatens to topple.

ADMITS INCENDIARISM.

Montreal Man Perjured Himself Seven Times, Say Witnesses.

Montreal, Sept. 2.—Henri Carufel, in the witness box yesterday, related to Judge Lanctot how at the instigation of Ovila Lambert, the lessee of the hotel, he had set fire to Pelquin's Hotel on May 26 last.
